90% of Major Crimes In D. C. Unpunished, Experts' Study Shows

Justice Group Charges Inefficient District Administration.

Better '37 Record Pledged by Brown

Public Apathy Assailed as One of Main Causes of Lawlessness.

"Nothing to Cluck About," is Elderman's reaction to the crime report in a striking cartoon—Page 8.

"Crime in the District," an editorial—Page 8.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Less than 10 per cent of all major crimes committed in the District during 1936 ended in actual court convictions, the Washington Criminal Justice Association reported yesterday.

In its first annual report, submitted at a meeting of business and civic leaders at the Willard Hotel, the association presented a crime picture "of which the Nation's Capital cannot feel proud."

Prepared by James Allen Nolan, managing director of the association, the report cited lack of "effective and efficient administration of criminal justice" as principal factor in the city's alarming crime record last year.

Crime Record "Unhealthy."

"Needless to say," the report read, "the District has far more serious crime than is healthy for any community. From facts and figures gathered by the association, it is obvious that the position of the Nation's Capital, from the viewpoint of criminal activities, is not an enviable one."

Law enforcement loopholes were depicted by the association in numerous comprehensive charts.

With reported felonies totaling 6,818 during 1936, Nolan showed that only 685 resulted in court convictions. And of the total reported crimes, 3,010 offenders escaped apprehension.

Nolan struck at lack of public cooperation as an important item in the vast difference between reported crime and actual convictions. A total of 948 cases, he said, were listed as "cleared"— but with no prosecution. He blamed this on public refusal to identify accused prisoners or press court action.

Hits "Technical Arrests."

Of all crimes reported, Nolan pointed out, 734 were "solved" by so-called "technical arrests." These cases are counted as "arrests" by police, he said, but the accused is not formally charged or prosecuted in court.

"For a number of years—indeed, no one seems to know how long ago it originated—it has been a practice to present only two crimes to the grand jury regardless of the number of crimes in which any one person may be involved," Nolan's report stated.

"The other cases were merely charged in the police records against the alleged criminal. These 'arrests' were known to law enforcement officials as 'Willie Pye' arrests.

"But no permanent court record is kept which would show that this accused prisoner's participation in other offenses had been brought to the attention of the court, and if later arrested for a large number of crimes, he would go into court with court records of convictions in only two previous cases."

Expects Better Record.

Commenting on the association's report yesterday, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, said:

"Under its present setup, the Washington Criminal Justice Association has been very helpful to us. The report, of course, is not as favorable as I would like to have it. But by continuing to work with the association on a co-operative basis and with public support, we are bound to establish a better record next year. Naturally, I am not pleased with what was found, but I am certain conditions can be improved."

The report showed 2,126 actual arrests for the total number of reported felonies. Of these, Nolan pointed out, 815 were settled in Police Court and 14 are still pending. To the grand jury went 1,297 cases, and of these 104 were dismissed and 1,193 indicted. Of the indictments, 104 were nolle prossed, 716 were tried and 377 are pending trial.

Baltimorean Speaks.

Of those tried in court, 31 were found not guilty and 685 were convicted.

Speaking at yesterday's meeting, James M. Hepbron, director of the Baltimore Criminal Justice Association and consultant for the local group, explained the great difference between reported crimes and actual convictions.

A large percentage of the discrepancy, Hepborn said, can be blamed directly on Washington citizens.

"The police department is not entirely to blame," said Hepbron. "Lack of co-operation from citizens is responsible to a great extent for the city's tardy conviction record. In many instances, police are hindered by complaining Washingtonians who refuse to press prosecution."

Efficiency in the administration

Mrs. Simpson Is 'Happy Now,' Calls U. S. a Land of 'Gadgets'

Windsor's Fiancee Welcomes American Woman, Chats With Her in Library of French Chateau; Says 'Fatalism' Will Solve Her Future.

By Virginia Dwyer.

(Copyright, 1937, for The Washington Post.)

(Miss Dwyer, brilliant young Boston newspaperwoman, took a long chance and obtained the only authentic interview with Wallis Simpson since she fled from London.)

Boston, Mass., May 4.—The American woman who made a career of marriage and succeeded in her career is far different from the way any of us have been allowed to picture her.

At Cande Villa, Monts, France, I spent a delightful hour with "Wally" Simpson and found her to be a shy, petite woman, quite nervous and vivacious.

Sitting on one small foot in a wing chair, she chatted at length with me about America, and her much-altered life.

About 5 feet 4 in heels, and surely weighing 100 pounds, this little person filled the solemn library of the villa with life and spontaneity. It is quite easy to see what her attraction is. Her so-called personality is a love of people. She is perfectly happy when she can talk with some one and exchange quips.

"Is Paris gay?" she asked, wide-eyed.

"Very," I replied.

"I'm so glad. It's taken the French a long time to get over the war and find money to spend again. And America—is it still a country of gadgets?"

"Gadgets?"

"You know what I mean—all kinds of funny things to cook with and peel potatoes and all that. The American advertisements intrigue me. I buy all those tricky things they advertise. Over here they won't have anything to do with them. You rush down to the kitchen and distribute the dearest little gadgets—and find them in the waste basket next day."

Mine is the only exclusive interview she has given.

I woke up in Paris and wondered if it were really worth while to take a three hour trip to a place I did not know and struggle through mud and rain on a shot-in-the-dark trip. I decided it was and managed to accomplish it with the aid of a French shuttle train, a country taxi and a public telephone in the nearest cafe to the villa through which I finally reached Mr. Rogers, who has been the mouthpiece for Mrs. Simpson.

He explained to me patiently that it was impossible to see Mrs. Simpson, whereupon I complained I had come all the way from the States; it was raining miserably and I was tired and my French was terrible.

He laughed then, and said, "Well, all right, since you're so near, come along and have some

Family Lays Mine Death To 4 Guards

Lewis, Moore, Middleton, Hobbs Named Before Liberties Group.

Widow, Son, Brothers Testify; Joining Union Blamed for Killing.

By Sidney Olson.

Two tousle-headed little Harlan County boys, who saw a union organizer shot down by deputy sheriffs from ambush; a raw-boned mountain man who saw his brother killed ten days ago "because he heerd of the Wagner act and joined a union," and the sad-faced widow of the dead miner went to the witness chair before the Senate Civil Liberties Committee yesterday to tell their stories.

Through their testimony four mine guards of the Harlan-Wallins Coal Co., owned by Pearl Bassham, were named as the slayers of Lloyd Clouse on last April 24—Bill Lewis, Melvin Moore, Logan Middleton and Leonard Hobbs.

Yesterday Lloyd Clouse's widow, his brother, his son and his little half-brother were the four who took the stand.

Mrs. Clouse Weeps.

For three long minutes there was a hush among the crowd in the smoke-hung hearing-room while Mrs. Minnie Clouse, of Ages, Ky., sobbed silently in a pink cotton handkerchief.

She had sat, pale and grieving, her straight black hair bundled up neatly with bobby-pins under a new blue straw hat, as Chairman La Follette questioned her gently.

She gave brief answers, this Harlan County mother of ten children, turning her head anxiously at times to glance at her youngest, an infant wrapped in a pink blanket, held awkwardly in the great, bony hands of her brother-in-law, Jasper Clouse.

She was telling the committee how two deputy sheriffs, Wash Irvin and Luke Hubbard, had come to her house to warn her against letting her little son, 13-year-old John Clouse, and her even smaller brother-in-law, 12-year-old Markham Clouse, testify before a grand jury about a shooting they had witnessed when deputies shot Tom Ferguson, a union organizer.

She agreed with the deputies, she said, and with Pearl Bassham, owner of the Harlan-Wallins coal mine, and employer of the deputies, that the testimony of the children "would only cause a lot of trouble and our house might get blowed up." But she had already sent the children to the railroad station to buy their tickets, at 8 o'clock in the morning.

Weeping Halts Testimony.

"My husband, Lloyd, left for work at 5 of the mornin'," she said, "but then suddenly he came back from work, and set his lunch down on the table, and said——"

Here she started to cry silently, and no one moved or made a sound in the packed and smoky room, where chairs sit seat to seat, where the score of messengers and newsmen shove in and out in a constant bustle, where the photographers' flash-bulbs flare constantly in the minor hubbub.

"Lloyd told me that Mr. Bassham had told him if the boys went down to the grand jury, it would cause trouble, and so he went off to the station and brought the boys back and didn't let them go."

La Follette excused her, she moved wearily to the front row and picked up her baby, and a little later Jasper Clouse was called to the stand.

Jasper Clouse is a lean, tall mountain man, with strong features, dark brown hair, and the twang of the hills in his voice. He sat powerfully and easily in the witness chair to tell how his brother, Lloyd, was killed, and how he himself was slugged.

First, Lindsay Baker, a previous witness, the back of his head still raw and bloody where he was slugged "with a blackjack from behind" by a mine guard on the day Clouse was killed, had just testified that he had been assaulted because he had joined the union newly formed in a Bassham mine.

"I was weak and bloody and had no place to go. I'd never had a cross word from any man in the mine until that day, Saturday, April

Duce, Rebels Plotted in '34, Madrid Claims Papers Prove; Civil War Flares in Barcelona

Troops Recalled From Front by Government in Anarchist Rising.

100 Reported Dead In Street Fighting

Officials Are Isolated in Palace; French Ship Lands Marines.

By the Associated Press.

Perpiganan, France, May 4.—Barcelona, capital of the autonomous Spanish Catalan state, tonight was torn by bloody civil strife within Spain's larger civil war.

Information leaking across the border, tight closed on the Spanish side for two days, indicated the anarchists, hitherto an important element in the Catalan regime, had risen against the government of the state which is closely allied with the Spanish government of Valencia and Madrid.

A traveler arriving by plane estimated 100 persons had been killed at Barcelona. He said the hospitals were jammed with wounded.

A French warship was reported to have landed marines to protect the French consulate.

Reports told of sanguinary street fighting with numerous casualties. The situation was represented as so grave the government had appealed to the Catalan forces opposing Gen. Francisco Franco's insurgents on the Aragon front to rush back to Barcelona to its aid.

Officials Trapped.

Officials of the government, headed by President Luis Companys, were reported virtual prisoners in the government palace, compelled to release anarchist leaders who had been arrested recently.

Reports differed on details of the clash. One account said the anarchists had seized the central telephone building, entrenched themselves therein and were fighting off repeated assaults by government guards.

Other information, without confirmation, said the anarchists had the upper hand in street fighting and had driven the military, police, civil guards and other units loyal to the government toward the outskirts of Barcelona.

The fighting was reported to have followed an anarchist demand that the cabinet—recently reorganized under Premier Jose Tarradellas—call a halt to its efforts to remove anarchists from posts of authority throughout Catalonia.

(Before its recent reorganization the cabinet itself contained a strong anarchist element.)

The government answered the anarchist demand by ordering all civilians to turn in their arms. The anarchists thereupon organized street demonstrations, which led directly to armed conflict.

Rebels Press Advance

St. Jean De Luz, France, May 4 (AP).—Three insurgent columns pressed on Amorebieta, only 11 miles east of Bilbao, tonight while the besieged Basque capital rushed preparations to evacuate about 10,000 women and children.

The three columns converged on Amorebieta from the north, east and south while the village was already under fire from insurgent gun emplacements on surrounding hills.

The insurgents cleaned up an area 20 miles wide and 10 miles deep, wiping out roving bands of government troops isolated by the quick insurgent thrusts.

A fleet of passenger liners raced toward Bilbao to evacuate as many refugees as possible while defenders made ready for a last stand.

More than 4,000 women and children, making up the first mass migration from the Biscayan capital, were booked to sail tonight on the 10,000-ton Spanish liner Habana.

Preparations were made to take 4,000 more children to England on a ship whose identity was kept secret for fear it might fall prey to the insurgent naval blockade.

Several French steamers, with an aggregate passenger capacity of 2,000, made ready at Bordeaux, France, for the run to Bilbao. It was believed the vessels, the Margaux, the Carimare and the Chateau Palmer, would set sail within 24 hours.

Record Arms Budget for Italy Adopted by Cheering Deputies

Increased Appropriation Provides for 'Ocean-Going' Navy, Stronger Guard on Frontiers, Boost in Air Force.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, May 4.—With the Duce watching them, cheering deputies of the Italian Parliament tonight passed Premier Mussolini's 5,500,000,000 lire ($289,300,000) national defense budget for 1937-38, an increase of 727,000,000 lire ($38,240,000) over the 1936-37 defense expenditures.

With shouts of "Duce! Duce!" they received the government's explanations of why Italy, with no war on her hands, now must spend more money on armaments than she appropriated for her three defense ministers when she was fighting in Ethiopia.

The budgets approved were for the ordinary peace-time expenses of the army, navy and air force. During the Ethiopian war there were numerous extraordinary appropriations for the African campaign which were placed in the budget of the ministry of colonies.

These explanations were made by the undersecretaries for war, navy and air—Il Duce himself is minister of all three departments—Gen. Alberto Pariani, Admiral Domenico Cavagnari and Gen. Giuseppe Valle.

Admiral Cavagnari hurled an implied challenge to other Mediterranean naval powers and indicated an extension of the range of Italian seapower.

He insisted the Italian navy "from now on must become an ocean-going navy" rather than one confined to the Mediterranean Sea. He pictured the Mediterranean and adjacent seas as sure to be battle zones in any future European war.

His budget, providing for building more striking units and increasing naval personnel, was for 1,850,000,000 lire ($97,310,000), or nearly 300,000,000 lire ($15,780,000) more than last year.

Gen. Pariani told the deputies Italy was taking no chances concerning protection of her frontiers. The government, he said, intended to build an army which would be able to paralyze an enemy's advances and "win the war in the shortest possible time."

He outlined establishment of a permanent frontier guard, and asked 2,350,000,000 lire ($134,130,000).

Gen. Valle, undersecretary for air, demanded an increase of about 280,000,000 lire ($14,728,000) for air defense, making his total budget 1,270,000,000 lire ($66,802,000).

Meanwhile, Italy and Germany agreed to stand together on Europe's main problems, come what may.

Premier Mussolini and the visiting Baron Konstantin von Neurath, German foreign minister, effected the accord to strengthen their friendship agreement of last fall, highly informed sources said.

And while Il Duce conferred with the Nazi official, Pope Pius sent a note to Reichsfeuhrer Adolf Hitler saying the Catholic Church must be free to fulfill its mission in Germany.

Loyalists to Take 'Proofs' to League

Rumors Rife in Europe as Leftists Prepare 'Bombshell.'

By Jay Allen.

(Copyright, 1937, for The Washington Post. Reproduction in whole or in part prohibited.)

[Jay Allen for years was the Chicago Tribune correspondent in Paris, Geneva and other European capitals. In 1930 he predicted the overthrow of Alfonso and when the revolution of 1936 broke out, he was in the midst of the fighting. Suspected as a loyalist, he escaped from the rebels, who had taken him prisoner, killed his chauffeur and destroyed his auto. He has scored repeated news beats, including the inside story of the rebel plot and the now famous Bull Ring massacre of Badajoz, where thousands of loyalists were slain by the Moors. Coming from Allen the following dispatch is of great interest.]

Paris, May 4.—Republican Spain has a diplomatic bombshell prepared and is only waiting for the right moment to spring it.

Europe's anxious diplomats know this and are alarmed.

For there are sensational rumors about the existence of documents uncovered in the secret files of Monarchist leaders and of the Italian consulates in Madrid and Barcelona, said to prove Mussolini has been engaged in promoting military rebellion against the Spanish Republic for years before Gen. Franco finally rose with Italian and German arms.

A most picturesque and incriminating document has come to light which shows Il Duce and Marshal Balbo sitting down with would-be rebels in March, 1934, and promising them money and arms for use against the then Conservative republic.

Document "Remarkable."

This document exists. The original this correspondent has just seen. Beside him is a photostatic copy. How it came into his hands five minutes before his intended departure for the Bilbao front, where 18,000 Italians are engaged, is another story.

It is altogether a remarkable document, and some day may be history. It is scrawled on the stationery of the Hotel Quirinal in Rome, and according to Spanish handwriting experts is in the hand of Don Antonio Goicoechea, former minister of the crown and leader of the Alfonsist faction of the Monarchists. In it Don Antonio in collaboration with Gen. Barrera, member of Primo de Rivera's first directorate and the hope then of the Spanish diehards, set down his impressions of their interview with Il Duce and Balbo. It is merely a rough draft.

It was filed away in a cleverly concealed safe in the monarchist headquarters in Madrid. After the failure of the military rebellion in July, the place was ransacked but this astonishing scrap of paper was overlooked.

Talk With Duce, Balbo.

The text follows:

"We, the undersigned, Lieut. Don Emilio Varrea, in his own name, and Don Rafael Olozaval and Don Lizarza, in the representation of the traditionals community (Carlist Party), and Don Antonio Goicoechea, as chief of the Renovacion Espanola Party (Alfonsist supporters), subscribed to the following to put on record what transcribed in the interview which took place at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of today, March 31, 1934, with the chief of the Italian government, Signor Mussolini, together with Marco Italo Balbo.

"After being informed in detail by answers to his question by each of those present on the Spanish political situation and on the aspiration and status of the army and navy and the two monarchist parties, the prime minister declared the following:

"First, that he was disposed to give the necessary assistance and means to both parties of the opposition to the regime existing in

Duke to Defer His Marriage For Coronation

Reunited With Mrs. Simpson; Ceremony Planned After May 18.

By the Associated Press.

Monts, France, May 4.—The Duke of Windsor, reunited with Wallis Simpson in the beautiful Chateau de Cande, tonight chose to keep their marriage plans a secret until after the coronation of his brother May 12.

Herman L. Rogers announced the decision, and persons close to the couple indicated the marriage probably would not take place before May 18.

The former Baltimore belle and the man who decided their love was more important than the world's most influential throne were reunited this afternoon after a separation of five months and one day.

They spent most of the afternoon together, away from the rest of the chateau's party. After a late dinner, the couple and their party sat up late in conversation around a log fire as a drizzle dampened the panes.

Photographer Seized.

Only one little incident disturbed the lovers' seclusion in the moss-covered chateau.

A French cameraman stole into the grounds during the afternoon and hid among rhododendron bushes for two hours.

Mrs. Simpson, he related, was dressed in a two-piece, navy blue sport suit. The duke wore a light brown suit.

Senate to Push Study of Child Labor Control

Hearings Seen as Step to Force Administration to Show Hand.

By Robert C. Albright.

Ordering hearings next week on general child labor legislation, the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee apparently maneuvered yesterday to break through Administration reticence on wages and hours and child labor plans.

The move followed reports the Administration would hold up its labor program pending outcome of the court dispute. A three-way approach has been under study ever since Supreme Court validation of the Wagner labor relations act, but details have been carefully guarded.

Construed by observers as an adroit attempt to force the Administration's hand in advance of a court program showdown, the Senate committee's action set hearings on all child labor proposals for Wednesday, May 12.

One Bill Before Body.

The committee has before it the Wheeler-Johnson bill, embodying a dual plan of prohibiting interstate shipments of goods produced by firms employing children under 16. Next week's hearings were thrown open to all child labor proposals.

Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, announced he will introduce a child labor bill late this week, or early next. Speculation turned on whether the Kentuckian first will consult the President, and whether his bill will embody the

Ickes, Senators Study Nuisance Industries Here

Congress Group Chosen as Proposed Rendering Plant Is Assailed.

Three Senators were named yesterday as a special committee to consider control of "nusance industries" in Washington at the same time it was learned that Interior Secretary Ickes is conducting an independent investigation of the abattoir problem.

At a meeting in which Senator Copeland (Democrat), of New York, said the establishment of a rendering plant in a "civilized section of any city" is inexcusable, Chairman William H. King of the Senate District Committee appointed a subcommittee to conduct hearings on his nuisance industry abatement measure.

Members of the group are Senators Tydings and McCarran, Democrats, and Austin, Republican.

Chairman Mary T. Norton of the House District Committee yesterday introduced a companion to the King bill.

Secretary Ickes may receive a report this week on the investigation he ordered of plans of Adolf Gobel, Inc., of New York and Chicago, to build a slaughterhouse and rendering plant in the 3700 block of Benning road northeast.

Testifying yesterday before the Senate District Committee, D. Edward Clark, counsel for Gobel, said in reply to a question by Copeland that he believed rendering could be performed at the plant without being a nuisance.

The New York legislator retorted he had yet to hear of a rendering plant which was not a nuisance.

Previously Copeland had stated that he did not object to establishment of a slaughterhouse in the District, his criticism being directed at such auxiliary features as rendering.

Clark attempted to convince the committee that not only could the projected Gobel plant be operated without being a public nuisance, but that scrapping of the company's program, a possibility under pro-

15-Cent Realty Tax Rise Seen To Meet Deficit

House Group Considering D. C. Revenue Prepares to Draft Program.

By James D. Secrest.

An increase in the realty tax of possibly 15 cents appeared probable yesterday as the House sub-committee on District revenue prepared to draft its tax program.

While the sub-committee hos no direct control over the real estate levy, its failure to recommend sufficient new taxes to balance the District budget will compel the Commissioners to raise the $1.50 tax on realty to make up the difference.

Following an executive conference between the sub-committee and the Commissioners, Chairman Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, said that another closed meeting will be held next Tuesday morning for the purpose of drafting a unified tax program to raise $6,000,000.

Although the District heads have submitted a five-point plan, which they estimate would raise $7,200,000 in general revenue, Kennedy said the sub-committee's objective will be to meet only the deficit anticipated when the District supply bill passed the House.

Will Ignore Any Increase.

He said the sub-committee will not take into account the serious threat that the deficit will be increased to more than $8,000,000 when the bill reaches the Senate floor.

Even the Commissioners showed no alarm over this danger at yesterday's hearing, although they admitted its existence. Melvin C. Hazen, president of the board, in answer to an inquiry from Kennedy, said:

"If our tax program doesn't raise enough revenue, we can raise the real estate tax to meet the deficit."

As a 10-cent increase in the $1.50 realty rate would raise but $1,300,000, according to District officials, a 15-cent jump probably would prove necessary if the tax bills produced

Fantastic Stories at Trial of Zaharoff's Aide Reveal International Arms Smuggling Ring

By the Associated Press.

Jaffa, Palestine, May 4.—An amazing story of a secret radio station, death in an orange grove, vanishing witnesses and secret societies led police today to conclude they had unearthed an international syndicate for smuggling arms.

Central figure in the fantastic story is Reuben Schenzvit, who once sold arms in South America for the late Sir Basil Zaharoff, Europe's mysterious munitions merchant.

Schenzvit was given preliminary hearing before British Magistrate Paget Bourke today on a charge of slaying Jacob Zwanger, 50-year-old Russian Jew and one-time vice commissar of harbors. Schenzvit denied the charges.

Police charge the actual slayer was Abdul Khader, an Arab employed by Schenzvit and in jail here.

The Arab has admitted killing the Russian and alleged that Schenzvit ordered him to do so, detectives working with British intelligence officers said.

Police investigation began with the disappearance of Zwanger the night of March 10. His weeping widow testified today she last saw him then, when he started for Schenzvit's office.

Seventeen days later the Russian's body was found in a sandy grave, knifed and bludgeoned, in an orange grove near Schenzvit's closely-guarded home in Ramat-Gan, a Jewish colony.

Zwanger had directed the Haganah, secret Jewish self-defense society. The society was so organized that each member knew only his immediate superior and none of his fellow members.

Police theorized the dead man was slain because he knew of operations by a foreign espionage service. Quickly, the British Royal Air Force Intelligence Service took charge of the investigation.

These developments turmbled one upon the other:

Both Zwanger and Schenzvit had worked in the Argentine. Both came here 10 years ago.

Schenzvit's house contained a powerful unlicensed radio, a dozen microphones and dictographs hidden behind pictures and mirrors. Police had to look four days to find them. Schenzvit explained he was a radio fan and installed the extra equipment to amuse his guests.

The house had an underground chamber and in it was found a blood-stained sledgehammer. A secret tunnel from this chamber led to within 400 yards of the orange grove where Zwanger's body was found.

Zwanger possessed plans for both the tunnel and the radio equipment at his own home in Tel Aviv.

A radio engineer who had been associated with Schenzvit burned many documents written in Italian within two hours after the latter's arrest bade his friends goodby and leaped to his death from a Tel Aviv office building.

Many letters from a known Nazi agent were found in Schenzvit's house. Zwanger previously had supplied information resulting in the deportation from Palestine of another Nazi agent.

A list of 80 German-Jewish immigrants who had evaded the German restrictions on withdrawal of money were among Zwanger's effects.

Several associates of Schenzvit and Zwanger have vanished. Authorities are deluged by anonymous, false and misleading clews.

A. J. Elliott Leads In Congress Race

Santa Barbara, Calif., May 4 (AP).—Alfred J. Elliott, who campaigned as a "Roosevelt Democrat," was leading tonight in early returns from a Tenth Congressional District election to choose a successor to the late Henry Stubbs, Democrat.

In 55 of the 660 precincts in the district, comprising five central-southern counties, Elliott, chairman of the Tulare County supervisors, polled 4,820 votes to 2,462 for Harry Hopkins, Republican, former chairman of the State highway commission.

Al Sessions, Bakersfield labor editor who announced he would back President Roosevelt's proposed Supreme Court reorganization, received 593 votes as a "write-in" candidate.

I. C. C. Sees Its Power Usurped By States With Daylight Time

Dairymen, Government workers, housewives and business men aren't the only ones interested in the current controversy over daylight saving time in the District, a visit to the Interstate Commerce Commission revealed yesterday.

Representative Leon Sacks' bill to advance local clocks one hour during the summer months is, it seems, an added symptom in a growing malady which has the I. C. C. gnashing its teeth.

It isn't that the commission, authorized to fix the boundaries of standard time zones throughout the Nation, has anything against daylight time as such. Its plaintive wail is that States and cities, by juggling their clocks as they please, are making a mockery of the Federal law purporting to set up and maintain a standard time system.

Thomas E. Payne, I. C. C. examiner in the office of Commissioner Clyde B. Aitchison, said yesterday the situation is very discouraging. Aitchison has been in charge of standard time zone investigations ever since Congress passed a law "to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States" in March, 1918.

"Who knows but that some cities

Miss Perkins Bans Changes In Wagner Act

Asks for Year or Two of Experience With Law as It Stands.

By William V. Nessly.

Five hours of conference between industrialists and labor leaders on collective bargaining procedure yesterday resulted in "no conclusions," but brought from Secretary of Labor Perkins an assertion that she is opposed to any amending of the Wagner labor relations act for "at least one year, possibly two."

Employers generally have called recently for changes in the act that would "make labor unions responsible." Since the act was upheld by the Supreme Court two weeks ago, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the National Association of Manufacturers both have taken such a stand.

However, in response to a question, Secretary Perkins included in the ban she would place on amendments a change proposed by Senator David I. Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, in the interests of the American Federation of Labor in its struggle with John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization. The amendment would require the Labor Relations Board, when requested, to poll workers in a plant by crafts, instead of as one unit in selecting their collective bargaining agency.

Wants Experience With Act.

Secretary Perkins declared the act should be allowed to stand unchanged "until we have had some experience with it."

Following the conference, Miss Perkins made public the one resolution adopted, which commended "similar free and frank consideration by all parties interested, of practices and policies that will promote peaceful and constructive improvement of industrial relations."

She said there had been no pronounced disputes or heated arguments.

Industrialists present were George H. Davis, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and Harper Sibley, former president; S. Clay Williams, chairman of R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.; R. R. Deupree, preident of the Procter & Gamble Co.; T. G. Graham, B. F. Goodrich Co.; Carl R. Gray, president, Union Pacific Railway Co; Jeremiah G. Hickey, president, Hickey Freeman Co., and Harold Whitman, president, Esmond (R. I.) Mills.

Labor Representatives.

The following represented labor: James T. Carey, president, United Electrical and Radio Workers; Ora L. Gassaway, United Mine Workers; M. H. Editor of Time Defends Account Of Dall 'Suicide'

New York, May 4 (AP).—John Martin, managing editor of Time magazine, testified in Supreme Court today that only "a few dunces" would have believed to be true a suicide story in which the magazine used the name of Curtis B. Dall, former son-in-law of President Roosevelt.

Dall is suing the magazine for $250,000 as a result of the article being printed, declaring he was "upset" by it, and that his business associates were "greatly embarrassed."

Dall charged the magazine published a story that he was supposed to have committed suicide in the White House in the presence of Mrs. Roosevelt and Dall's former wife.

Bruce Bromley, attorney for the magazine, read a statement purporting to have been made by President Roosevelt. He said the magazine, after printing the "statement," began the next paragraph with the words, "This is what President Roosevelt did not say."

New Faces in Congress.

Rep. Champion Views Defense As Best Guarantee for Peace

-REPRESENTATIVE EDWIN V. CHAMPION.

Illinois Representative Has 'Deep Convictions' About Court Plan, but Remains Silent; Supports Aid for War Widows.

By Liam Lenihan.

Edwin Van Meter Champion has "deep convictions" about the President's plan to revamp the Supreme Court, but when you ask him what they are he will laughingly play 'possum.

The 46-year-old Representative-at-Large from Illinois was appointed to the House Judiciary Committee two days before President Roosevelt made public his epochal views on Court reform.

Champion's parents hailed from Virginia, where his grandfather was a minister, but they moved to Mansfield, Ill., where their future legislator-son was born.

In 1912 he was graduated from the University of Illinois School of Law, was admitted to the bar and shortly afterward went into practice.

When America entered the World War the young lawyer hurried to the first officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan. Then, after three months intensive military training, he was commissioned second lieutenant, assigned to the Eighty-sixth Division and served overseas. In February, 1919, he was discharged with a captaincy rank and returned to Peoria, Ill., to serve as assistant State's attorney.

Returning to private practive in December, 1920, Champion swung into the limelight again as State's attorney in 1932. He held that post until his election to Congress last November.

A one-time service officer of the large Peoria Post of the American Legion, Champion is vitally interested in legislation to aid dependents of former soldiers and their widows. And he believes a strong national defense is the only guarantee to keep the United States out of war, adding that the neutrality bill is a stopgap, although a "step in the right direction."

Hobbies? Sports, hunting and fishing. He is looking forward to some duck sniping after Congress adjourns.

Navy Adopts Rigid Eye Tests for Midshipmen

More severe eye-sight standards for Naval Academy candidates were adopted by the Navy Department yesterday to prevent repetition of the lare number of dismissals because of defective vision.

Hopkins to Face Sub-committee Today on Relief

WPA Chief to Testify on Needs; Dual Supply Bill Passes.

The Administration's chief advocate of "spending to save," Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, today will run the gantlet of a House Appropriations subcommittee bent on saving for the Treasury one-third of his $1,500,000,000 1938 relief estimates.

Budget Director Daniel Bell was in conference yesterday with House Appropriations Chairman Edward T. Taylor and his two ranking committee assistants — Representative Clarence Cannon, of Missouri, and Representative Clifton A. Woodrum, of Virginia.

Cannon said it was merely a "routine conference." The Missourian withheld his views on the $500,000,000 proposed relief slash pending Hopkins' testimony. But Woodrum, holding out for the cut, said the "burden of proof" would be on Hopkins to show more is needed.

Await President's Views.

Agitation for percentage cuts in all appropriations awaited the return of the President from his fishing trip. Representative Taylor said he would not favor any specific economy plan until differences as to method of cutting have been ironed out in conference with the President.

Meanwhile an Appropriations subcommittee completed consideration of Secretary of the Interior Ickes' request for extension of PWA until June, 1939, but delayed a report to the House. On the committee's decision rests the fate of the $145,000,000 remaining unobligated in the PWA revolving fund.

Difficulties in applying the economy pruning knife was further evidenced yesterday, when Congressional action was completed on the $1,503,441,943 Treasury - Postoffice bill.

The Treasury-Postoffice measure was trimmed $42,554,275 under budget estimates, but was stil $230,000,000 larger than last year, due, it was said, to funds included for the social security retirement reserve.

Passage came on House aproval of a conference report on the bill, which now needs only the signature of the President.

Byrnes Bides Time.

While the House Appropriations Committee today ponders a $500,000,000 slash in relief estimates, Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, is biding his time in the Senate for a further operation on Hopkins' bill.

Byrnes not only favors the half-billion cut, but will ask the Senate Appropriations Committee to shift half of the relief burden on States and subdivisions able to raise the money. Later Byrnes will submit his proposed 10 per cent cut in all appropriations.

Support for the Byrnes relief plan came yesterday from Senator Josiah Bailey, of North Carolina. Without mentioning the Byrnes plan by name, Bailey said "the Federal Administration ought to proceed with localizing the (relief) problem, and to reverse its present program of making it a permanent Federal activity."

Bailey said he preferred "work relief" to "direct relief" but thought the work "ought to be real and the work useful."

M. I. T. Students Lose In Battle With Police

Cambridge, Mass., May 4 (AP).—Four hundred Massachusetts Institute of Technology students went on a rampage late tonight, lost a hand to hand scuffle with metropolitan district police, and finally were routed when city police hurled tear gas bombs at them.

Social Security Law Is Upheld In U. S. Brief

Constitutionality of Old Age Act to Be Argued Today in Supreme Court.

By the Associated Press.

The Government told the Supreme Court yesterday the old-age pension provisions of the social security act were constitutional because they advanced "the general welfare of the United States."

The brief, signed by Attorney General Cummings and other Department of Justice officials, was presented preparatory to arguments today on a challenge of the old-age pension legislation by George P. Davis, of Boston.

"Whether any particular expenditure is for the general welfare," the Government brief contended, "is a matter completely within the determination of Congress.

"In any event the decision of Congress is not reviewable by the courts if by any reasonable possibility it is for the general welfare."

Lawyers said a final decision on the act's constitutionality, covering both the pension section and unemployment insurance, might be given on May 17. Arguments already have been heard on the insurance aspect of the law.

Bill to Register All Firearms Is Sent to House

Cummings Drafts Measure as New Club in U. S. War on Crime.

Every possessor of firearms in the United States would be required to register his weapon or weapons under a bill submitted by Attorney General Cummings to Speaker Bankhead.

Possession of rifles, shotguns, revolvers and pistols is specifically covered in the proposed law, which was submitted as a new club in the Justice Department's war on crime.

The measure would amend the present act applying only to machine guns, sawed-off shotguns, sawed-off rifles and silencers. It would require payment of a tax of $1 on each transfer of one of the weapons enumerated.

Announcing submission of the proposed law, the Attorney General said:

"While the present act has been of great assistance in the work of law enforcement, it is far too limited in scope. * * * The same reasons that impelled the Congres to provide for the regulation of traffic in machine guns and the like make it equally essential that all types of firearms be placed under similar supervision.

"No serious financial burden would be imposed on anyone by a $1 tax on the transfer of a revolver, pistol, rifle or shotgun. The honest and law-abiding citizen would be caused far less hardship in the proposed enactment than by the existing requirement that he register his automobile."

It was emphasized that the proposed law does not seek to impair the right "to keep and bear arms" guaranteed under the Constitution, but is intended to let law enforcement officers know where every such weapon in the country is being kept.

N. Y. Burlesque Called Worse Than District's

Rev. William Darby Makes Slight Concession in Crusade Here.

A slight concession in the burlesque controversy was made yesterday by the Rev. William L. Darby, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches, when he said he felt that burlesque is not as bad here as it was in New York, where the theaterse were closed last week-end.

"Of course, you understand," Dr. Darby hastened to add, "I know very little about this whole matter. Any investigation that's going on is in the hands of Mr. LaRoe (Wilbur LaRoe, jr.), chairman of our committee on civic affairs. He's been studying this thing. I haven't."

While the details of LaRoe's criticism of burlesque in Washington remained undisclosed there was directed to him yesterday a request that the Federation of Churches "hold in abeyance any action against the local burlesque theater."

Critic Makes Request.

The request was in the form of a resolution signed by Arthur R. John, president of the national board of governors of the Burlesque Critics Association of America.

"The Burlesque Critics Association of America deplores and denounces any and all persons whose administration of burlesque producing results in unsavory notoriety and censorial intervention by any regulatory agency," declared John's resolution.

But, it pointed out, leading burlesque producers have announced plans to "subordinate the indecency" of strip-tease exhibitionism and "place such appearances on a higher plane of stage artistry."

Favor Delaying Crusade.

Under this circumstance the Burlesque Critics directors thought that LaRoe's attack ought to be postponed "until it can be determined whether or not the announced plans of the Independent Burlesque Association be fulfilled during the coming season."

The resolution described burlesque as "a legitimate form of theatrical production," the "only type of stage revue or extravaganza which a large section of the population can enjoy."

Burlesque, it added, has developed "a type of performer, the strip-tease artists * * * whose work lends itself to unbridled, unprincipled and indecent exploitation." Such exploitation, the resolution maintained, caused the nonrenewal of burlesque theater licenses in New York.

Widowed Mother Seriously Injured In Fall at Home

Two fresh-faced youngsters—Lee Crump, 12, and his 10-year-old brother, William, yesterday played with a Chinese puzzle in the grounds of the District Receiving Home, unmindful of the fact that their widowed mother lay seriously ill in Casualty Hospital.

The mother, Mrs. Ruth Crump, 38, unemployed and partly crippled, suffered injuries to her head and back early yesterday when, attempting to clean her first-story window from an outside fire escape, she fell 10 feet to a flagged areaway down below.

German, Polish Jews' Plight Described Here

$46,000 Already Obtained, Simon Says as United Appeal Drive Opens.

Starvation and misery among the Jews of Europe were pictured last night by speakers at a mass meeting at the Jewish Community Center as they officially opened the $80,000 drive of the United Jewish Appeal.

There is slight hope of saving the Jews of Germany and Poland, volunteer workers were told.

Drive teams were encouraged by the announcement of Morris Simon, cochairman of the campaign, that more than $46,000 already had been pledged by a number of large contributors. He urged the canvassers to seek a one-third increase in individual contributions this year over the 1936 collections.

Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron, of Baltimore, speaking of his experiences in Germany, told of Jewish children deprived of schooling and of the terrorization of the Jews by secret police.

He said "one-third of the Jews of Berlin have been reduced to the level of destitution," and "more than a million Polish Jews are on the verge of starvation."

Bates Explains Juvenile Crime Before P.-T. A.

National Session Told of Relations of Delinquency to Environment.

By Hope Ridings Miller.
A Staff Correspondent.

Richmond, May 4.—Sanford Bates, executive director of the Boys Clubs of America, stressed the relationship between social conditions and tendencies toward delinquency in a talk at a juvenile protection conference held this afternoon in connection with the forty-first annual convention of the Parent-Teacher Association here this week.

"We have not thus far been very successful in finding the cause of juvenile delinquency, because there is no one cause. As yet, we have not gone far beyond the diagnosing stage in curing mental inadequacy, but at last we are opening our eyes to the fact that there is a definite tie-up between delinquency and poor housing, bad health, bad home environment," continued the former director of the Federal prison system.

Bates further pointed out that persons concerned with juvenile protection made a mistake in talking too much about crime prevention. "Just as doctors have stopped talking about disease and started stressing the importance of preserving health, so we workers for crime prevention should concentrate on improving living conditions and home environments and cease discussing juvenile delinquency. Positive thoughts will lead to positive action in juvenile protection."

Miss McConnell Speaker.

Miss Beatrice McConnell, director of the industrial division, U. S. Children's Bureau, joined Bates in leading the round-table discussion on welfare services available to the protection of children and youth, and methods to improve home conditions in each community.

Premarriage examination for syphilis of all persons, and prenatal tests and treatment was urged by Dr. Thomas H. Parran, jr., in a talk before the morning assembly.

"Congenital syphilis must go, and must go quickly," the speaker declared in his discussion of "the health of the community."

"Every syphilitic baby is a failure of maternal education, of the public authority and of the medical profession, which should cause all of us to blush with shame."

The birth rate of the United States continues to decline while the general death rate in the past few years has been stationary, Dr. Parran pointed out. "Therefore children today are fewer and more valuable than ever before."

Six Better Health Steps.

The speaker advanced six steps "to better child health":

1. See that the child is well born; you have good pre-natal care; that your child is free from the germs of syphilis.
2. Secure expert medical advice and guidance in care and feeding of your baby.

Shortly before his speech, Dr. Parran revealed to a Post reporter that bills had been introduced in 15 State Legislatures now in session, seeking to make it mandatory that persons, before marriage, be required to take the Wassermann Test for syphilis.

Health Law Obstacles.

In a symposium following Dr. Parran's address, Mrs. Mary T. Bannerman, of Washington, national chairman of legislation, stressed the difficulty in passing adequate health laws "when each one must run the gantlet of the House, the Senate and amendment-makers before it can be presented for executive signature."

Other national chairmen who participated in the symposium were Miss Mary England, Montgomery, Ala.; Miss Mary E. Murphy, Chicago; Dr. Lillian R. Smith, Lansing, Mich.; Mrs. M. D. Wilkinson, Tacoma, Wash., and Dr. William McKinley Robinson, Kalamazoo, Mich.

Among resolutions presented today was one urging "concerted effort to throttle the forces of crime and racketeering in this country," and another to bring about "quick adjustment of the economic and social problem created by removal of youth from industry."

Resolutions will be adopted Thursday.

Money management was discussed at a conference led by Miss Florence Barnard, of Boston, consultant for the school education committee. "The lack of proper money management training has resulted in a nation of financial illiterates or drifters," she said.

Dr. Thomas W. Gosling, associate chairman of the national convention and director of the American Junior Red Cross, directed the conference on international relations, which discussed "Home and Community as Builders of World Friendship."

Responsibility for the future citizenship of the modern child was set squarely on the shoulders of parents and teachers in the conference on legislation, at which Mrs. Mary T. Bannerman presided.

"The ultimate goal in a democratic country should be adequate public library service within easy reach of everyone," declared Miss Julia Wright Morrill, of Chicago, chief of the public library division of the American Library Association. Miss Morrill was in charge of the conference on library service, at which discussions were conducted by Miss Charl Omond Williams, of Washington, and Mrs. Frank E. Dorsey, Kansas City.

Dr. Mary Dabney Davis, of the U. S. Office of Education, led the discussion at the kindergarten extension conference, which had as its general theme, "Early Childhood Education."

Editor Talks on Virginia.

Delegates tonight heard Dr. Douglas S. Freeman, Richmond editor and author of "The Life of Robert E. Lee," glorify Virginia cities as the "cradles of early American community life."

Reviewing the history of Virginia landmarks, Dr. Freeman stressed that "each of these is glorified by time. Looking back, we see most things in a rosier hue," he declared.

"Even the memory of war is less hideous than its realities. Years afterward we are disposed to forget the horror of armed conflict and remember only its valor."

In conclusion, Dr. Freeman urged delegates to remember cradles of early community life were no more important than those of the present —"those you parents and teachers are now helping to glorify."

District of Columbia P.-T. A. officers present at the banquet were Mrs. W. B. Fry, Mrs. H. N. Stull, Mrs. W. B. Calvert, Mrs. P. C. Ellett, Mrs. C. C Mullady and Mrs. B. W. Eldrid. In all 37 delegates from the District attended.

School Heads From 12 Cities To Study Washington System

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, who has been superintendent of Washington public schools for 15 years, will have the unique experience of coming to Washington to visit his own schools Friday.

The school chief is in a tour. Leaving the Capital last week-end, he joined superintendents from 12 other cities in Chicago. They plan to spend the next two weeks visiting vocational education plants of eight cities in the Middle West and the East.

Known as the "Occupational educational tour for school superintendents," the trip started Monday in Minneapolis, Minn. Yesterday the schoolmen spent in Milwaukee. Then they were to go to Indianapolis and Cincinnati.

Friday the party will reach Washington. Dr. Ballou will conduct a tour through vocational schools here. Then Dr. John W. Studebaker, U. S. Commissioner of Education, will be host to the visitors as they inspect the Federal Office of Education and the U. S. Employment Service.

Monday the superintendents will be on their way to Buffalo, N. Y., and then they will visit Providence, R. I., and Newark, N. J. They will disband May 14 in Princeton, N. J., after spending two days there summarizing their findings.

The trip, sponsored by the National Occupational Conference, of New York, is made possible through a special grant from the Carnegie Corporation.

Superintendents on the tour represent cities of the South and Far West, as well as those in the East and Central States.

Gold Shipments Show Decrease

New York, May 4 (AP).—The spring transatlantic gold rush showed further signs of slowing today, holding out prospect of relief for the United States Treasury in borrowing funds to pay for the incoming metal under its gold "sterilization" policy.

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York reported $14,719,000 had been received late yesterday.

And no matter how many I smoke, Camels never get on my nerves."

Gill Acquitted In Chevy Chase Assault Cases

Ten Witnesses Establish Alibi for Colored Doctor's Son.

Rencher Lee Gill, 32-year-old son of a Washington colored physician, was acquitted of charges of criminal attack yesterday in Montgomery County Circuit Court at Rockville, Md.

After defense attorneys had presented ten witnesses to prove an alibi on the night of March 14, Chief Judge Hammond Urner and Associate Judges Arthur D. Willard and Charles W. Woodward ruled that the evidence was insufficient to convict.

The judges also held that since his confession of the March 14 attack had been proven false that the confession to the other attack also could not be given credence and dismissed the charges in both cases.

Gill had been charged with criminal attack on two prominent Chevy Chase matrons near their homes and police had believed he was the whistling bandit who terrorized fashionable Chevy Chase for several months with robberies and handbag snatchings.

The defense witnesses placed on the stand yesterday by Attorneys Austin Canfield, Robert B. Peter and William T. Hannan placed Gill in Washington from 7:45 p. m. to 11 p. m. so that he could not have been in Chevy Chase at the time of the attack.

A half dozen character witnesses also were placed on the stand by the defense.

The trial started Monday and continued until yesterday afternoon when the judges announced they did not want to hear any arguments from the defense, and State's Attorney James H. Pugh declared the State would submit the case without argument.

Only one of the attacked women testified and her testimony was given behind closed doors in the judges' chambers. She testified that the man who attacked her had no impediment in speech. Gill has a pronounced impediment.

Wise Forecasts Attack By Hitler on Protestants

Kansas City, May 4 (AP).—Rabbi Stephen S. Wise says he considers Adolf Hitler a "madman" who is "out to destroy civilization."

In an address opening the annual Jewish Welfare Federation campaign here, the New Yorker asserted Jews were "the first victims for Hitler to attack because we are numerically weakest," and that the German's speech of last Saturday presages "you of the Catholic Church are next."

"And you Protestants who think you are safe should know that you will follow," Rabbi Wise added.

Modern Era May Give Man a Gigantic Brain

New York, May 4 (AP).—The increasingly complex problems of modern civilization, said Prof. Frederick Tilney tonight, may lead to the development of a dome-like forehead to accommodate a huge brain.

Attorneys Dispute Exhibiting Letters Before 'Balm' Jury

Detroit, May 4 (U.P.).—Ardent love letters written to Laura Strittmatter by Charles H. Cullinan while he was living in a Washington Apartment with his wife were the subject tonight of a three-sided argument between Judge John V. Brennan and attorneys on both sides in Mrs. Cullinan's $100,000 "heart balm" suit.

Miss Strittmatter thought the letters would prove that it was Cullinan and not herself who kept their romance sizzling and led her into a bigamous marriage.

Judge Brennan was expected to rule on letting the jury see the letters when court convenes at 9:30 tomorrow.

Breuning Named Harvard Lecturer

Boston, May 4 (AP).—Harvard University today announced the appointment of Dr. Heinrich Bruening, former chancellor of Germany, as a lecturer on government and tutor in the division of history, government and economics.

Nazis profess disinterest in Bruening's doings. He seldom is singled out in the frequent attacks no pre-Hitler forms of government.

Four Deputies Called Slayers Of Harlan Man

Widow, Son, Brothers Tell Their Story Before Liberties Group.

24, after I'd joined the union. So I went up to Jasper Clouse's house to get help, and Lloyd and Jasper were there. The two of them went out and then Jasper came back and said, 'They shot Lloyd down and they goin' to shoot me if I don't get away.' "

Jasper Tells Story.

From that point on, Jasper Clouse told the story.

"My work had always been satisfactory till I were supposed to be a union member and then they cut me off my job on Thursday, April 22.

"That day Lloyd came to my house in Verda (Pearl Bassham's company town) and after Lindsey Baker came in all bloody. I gave him a clean shirt to change in, and Lloyd and me went down to Verda to see a man named Coyt Dozer.

"We walked by the No. 1 Commissary into the saloon to look for Coyt. They were several men in the saloon I knowed, Logan Middleton and Charley Middleton, Melvin Moore and Bill Lewis, Leonard Hobbs and Branch Smith. All but Charley and Branch were company guards for Pearl Bassham.

"We hadn't had any drinks and we didn't drink anything. Lloyd stood right by me while I bought two pints of liquor from Grant Smith and two packs of cigarettes. We didn't speak to nobody, but Grant Smith at the counter.

"The four guards stood in the hallway as we started out the door, and they followed us out, Bill Lewis in front. I heered Bill Lewis say, 'We got to search you boys,' and we both turned around.

"Right then Bill Lewis and Melvin Moore started shootin' and I seen my brother fall. I wa'n't armed, and he had a automatic .38 on him but he didn't have no chance to use it.

"I grabbed for Logan Middleton's guns as he jerked them at me and we scuffled around until somebody—I think 'twere Hobbs, knocked me on the head.

"When I came to they were all gone and I was there and my brother were on the ground dead."

Moved to Next County.

Jasper Clouse then related how he had made swift arrangements with an undertaker, had spent the night hiding out in a friend's house, and then "early Sunday mornin', the next day, I went to the undertaker's to take keer of my brother, and then I got both our families together and we moved that mornin' to Pineville, in the next county."

The two little Clouse boys, Markham and John, had testified earlier about seeing Tom Ferguson, union organizer, shot and wounded by four deputies they recognized as Bill Lewis, Melvin Moore and Luke and Lee Hubbard.

Blond, tousle-headed and piping of voice, the Clouse boys looked like twins, although 12-year-old Markham is the uncle of 13-year-old John. Each had a red pocket comb peeping from the breast pocket of an over-large gray suit, and each chewed gum violently and with evident satisfaction as he spoke up freely in response to La Follette's questions.

La Follette called Bassham, at last, and questioned the thin-lipped little owner of the largest mine in Harlan County for almost three hours. Again and again throughout that time La Follette reminded the witness this was his opportunity to answer the previous testimony. Repeatedly the chairman, visibly controlling himself with an effort, pleaded with Bassham not to answer "evasively."

Bassham, quiet, calm, his pale-blue eyes cold, sat meditatively fingering the red gringe of hair around his bald head, answering, "I might have," "Possibly," "It may be," "I don't remember, "I don't believe so." Very rarely he answered yes or no. Finally, La Follette, after recapitulating the testimony of a score of more of witnesses, and finding Bassham unwilling or unable to refute or impeach that testimony, growled hotly:

"In all this committee's long experience with evasive witnesses, you're the worst one yet!"

Bassham attempted to refute at one point the testimony that his 800 employes were forced to take chances at $1 each on an automobile that was raffled off two or three times a month.

He admitted he had thus raffled off "eight or ten" of the company's cars, realizing $700 or $800 on each raffle, with the prize each time a used car of $200 or $300 value. After he had denied his miners were forced to take these chances, La Follette recalled to the stand William "Thug" Johnson, a former deputy of Bassham's, who stated flatly he had orders from other deputies that "the bald-headed man, Bassham, says the men got to take these here chances if they goin' to stay here."

La Follette then read to the witness the Kentucky statute on lotteries, which imposes a minimum fine of $500 with 2 years in jail, and a maximum fine of $5,000 with a 5-year jail sentence. Several spectators set up an impromptu cheer, and La Follette rapped sternly for order.

After Bassham had contradicted his own previous testimony on a number of matters, particularly those involving his actions in greeting Bill Lewis, accused in the testimony as the slayer of Lloyd Clouse, on the day after that shooting, La Follette reminded him of the possibility of a perjury indictment. Bassham then substituted the answer "I don't believe I have no remembrance of it," as a stock answer for his previous flat "I don't have no remembrance of it."

Unfold Stories of New Labor Slayings in 'Bloody' Harlan District

Associated Press Photos.

A packed committee room at Civil Liberties hearing yesterday heard from eye witnesses how miners were ambushed and slain by deputized mine guards during the past ten days. No arrests have been made nor indictments asked since the shootings. Jasper Clouse (left) told how he saw his brother, Lloyd, shot to death by mine guards. "I got hit over the head," he said, "after about 10 or 12 shots were fired. When I came to, I was laying in the road beside my dead brother." (Above) Markham Clouse (left), 12, and John Clouse, 13, told how four deputy sheriffs shot into a carload of miners from ambush. Mrs. Minnie Clouse (right), wife of Lloyd Clouse who was killed, corroborated testimony of her son, John.

Senate Committee to Push Child Labor Study Despite New Delay Tactics of Administration

hitherto undisclosed Administration plan.

Sponsored by Chairman Burton K. Wheeler, of the Interstate Commerce Committee, leading liberal opponent of the President's court plan, and Senator Hiram Johnson, California's Progressive Republican, the Wheeler-Johnson bill attacks the child labor problem from two flanks.

Follows Court Decision.

First, it follows the Supreme Court decision on the Ashurst-Sumners prison-made goods decision by prohibiting interstate shipments violating laws of States to which they are consigned.

Second, it bans all interstate shipments of all child labor commodities.

Not only the labor program, but the Administration's complete farm plans, have been withheld from Congress, which expected a forward movement along both lines following the Wagner decision. Word has been passed at the Capitol that the Administration's programs on both would be held up pending settlement of the court controversy.

Impatience at the apparent strategy has been expressed in several Democratic quarters, several independent attempts have been made to break through it.

The Administration's crusade against monopolies was disclosed only after the Miller-Tydings price maintenance bill reached the brink of House consideration, and the President had intervened to stop it.

A bill by Representative Howard W. Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, applying the Ashurst-Sumners principle to invoke interstate regulation of child labor, wages and hours, and fair trade practice, was given brief hearings by the House Judiciary Committee.

But this bill employs the State contral method, backed by Federal enforcement, and prevailing opinion is the Administration prefers direct Federal control. Lacking an expression from the President, this bill was temporarily laid aside, when members said they had arrived at the "crossroads" between State and Federal action.

A similar bill has been offered by Chairman William P. Connery, of the House Labor Committee, but Connery declares he will not proceed until he hears from the White House.

The first flat break with the Administration came on the farm front. Only last week, the Senate Agriculture Committee voted to call in State agriculture commissioners and frame its own farm program, holding up the Agriculture Department's farm marketing bill. Extension of the soil conservation law is moving forward in Congress, but Administration future plans for farm tenancy and crop insurance have not been revealed.

Three or more measures introduced in the Senate for regulation of child labor, in addition to the Wheeler-Johnson plan, will be called up before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee when the child labor hearings open next week.

Every effort will be made to elicit the Administration's views and plans on the subject. Representatives of the Department of Labor will be invited to testify and submit amendments. Notices have been sent to interested members of the Senate. If present strategy is followed through, the bill will be reported and on the Senate calendar before the court plan comes to a vote.

This and other independent moves in Congress are reliably understood to have been induced by delay tactics on the court plan, and the apparent blockade of other legislation until the judiciary issue is settled.

The President's court bill, with committee sentiment aligned at least ten to eight against it, continued snagged in the Senate Judiciary Committee yesterday, as members weighed compromise proposals. Opponents confidently predicted Senate defeat. One Senator said the President's economy program, sacrificing measures that might have been used for trading, would complete its destruction.

Discussion of compromise proposals in committee turned on the plan of Senator George McGill (Democrat), Kansas, to limit additional Presidential appointments to two in each Administration, to assist justices over 75. McGill is "noncommittal" on the six-judge increase, but observers have listed him for it.

The opposition's implied offer of co-operation on a compromise along lines of the plan of Senator Carl A. Hatch (Democrat), New Mexico, providing one additional justice annually, yesterday was rejected by Chairman Henry F. Ashurst. Ashurst said he would oppose any modification of the six-judge increase.

Would Join Old Company.

Boston, May 4 (AP).—Lieut. Col. James Roosevelt, United States Marine Corps Reserves, has applied for membership in the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, it was disclosed today when members received notices of their next meeting.

D. C. Is Fertile Mission Field, Baptists Hear

Most Strategic in World, Dr. Rufus Weaver Tells Columbia Group.

Washington—not Africa, India or China—is the most strategic mission field in the whole world, District of Columbia Baptists were told at the opening of their sixtieth annual meeting yesterday in Metropolitan Baptist Church.

Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, executive secretary of the Columbia Association of Baptist Churches, made the statement.

Surveys, he said, have been made of large areas of population, "thereby furnishing to us reliable guidance in the selection of new fields.

Two Achievements Lauded.

Inauguration of the American Baptist survey commission and the celebration of the Luther Rice centenary were outstanding achievements of District Baptists in the last year, said Dr. Weaver. He said the erection in the Capital of "an adequate building for the housing of Baptist historical material with offices and classrooms for educational activities" were outstanding aims of the survey commission.

E. B. Shaver was elected moderator of the association for the coming year. Other officers include: The Rev. C. B. Austin, of West Washington Baptist Church, vice moderator; S. G. Nottingham, clerk; W. N. Janson, assistant clerk, and Elgin Smith, treasurer.

Reports were presented yesterday afternoon by Charles V. Imlay, president of the board of trustees, and by Mrs. Susie E. Hoonagle, president of the board of lady managers of the Baptist Home for the Aged. Mrs. Ethel T. James, president of the board of managers of the Baptist Home for Children, reported that 29 boys and 16 girls are cared for in that institution.

Senator Logan Speaks.

Senator M. M. Logan, of Kentucky, addressed last night's session on the importance of Sunday School for men.

Report of the Baptist Woman's Missionary Association will be made this morning by Mrs. E. B. Shaver, recording secretary, and by Mrs. J. M. Rissler, financial secretary. The Rev. Francis H. Rose, missionary to the Philippines, will adress the group.

The meeting will close tonight with addresses by Dr. Joseph A. Cooper, of New York, field representative of the Northern Babtist Convention; and By Dr. Walter F. Binns, of Roanoke, Va., who represents the executive committee of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Knudsen Reveals General Motors' Expansion Plans

Detroit, May 4 (U.P.).—Expansion along a wide front in the automobile industry was forseen tonight when William S. Knudsen announced a $40,000,000 improvement program for General Motors Corporation in 1938.

Knudsen's announcement, made at his first press conference since he was elected president of the world's largest motor car organization yesterday, followed a recent statement by Henry Ford that he would put millions into new machinery and higher wages.

Much of General Motors' expansion, Knudsen revealed, will center in the Chevrolet division which produces the corporation's principal product in the low price range in which Ford specializes.

Production of Chevrolets, he said, would be stepped up by nearly 1,000 cars a day.

Utah Cult Head Certifies Death Of Member, Says 'She'll Return'

Monticello, Utah, May 4 (AP).—A death certificate, meeting the law's demand, was signed at Utah's strange "Home of Truth" colony today for a woman dead two years—but the cultists' leader stubbornly proclaimed:

"She'll return and live again!"

Mild-mannered little Eva Ramsey, State health department attache, went last night to the colony's home north of here, the residence of Mrs. Marie M. Ogden, founder of the cult. Mrs. Ogden once refused to sign a death certificate, as required by law, for Mrs. Edith Peshak, who died in February, 1935.

Though still denying the woman is dead, Mrs. Ogden penned her signature under flickering candles.

"There will be no prosecution, so far as we are concerned," said the woman investigator before she returned to Salt Lake City, 300 miles north of this desert village.

Thus ended an amazing story that "broke" a few months after Mrs. Peshak's death when word spread that there had been no burial, that the body, reported "partially mummified," was the object of weird, secret rites. The cultists believe in reincarnation.

Skeptics spoke of secret burial. The colonists were silent. Then, last week, a former cultist swore he burned the body at Mrs. Ogden's direction. She refused comment then and persisted tonight in saying only, "the body de-materialized." But she added:

"I am in constant communion with Edith. She will be restored in time to physical life. Yes, she will live and be recognized by others."

Mrs. Ogden said in a statement, "I reserve the right to consider our member as living rather than to acknowledge death as the certificate would indicate * * *."

Roosevelt Seeks New Scenes for Attack on Tarpon

Galveston Tex., May 4 (AP).—President Roosevelt's fishing party decided today it had taken its quota of tarpon off Port Aransas and set out for Point Isabel near the Mexican border for a change of scenery.

A message received at noon said: "Left Port Aransas at 7 o'clock this morning. Expect arrive Point Isabel about 3 this afternoon. Sea too choppy for trolling, but hope for fish at mouth of Rio Grande this afternoon."

The President caught his first tarpon, a 90-pounder, while others in the party were landing 13 more, after a long day of trolling along the south jetty off Port Aransas yesterday.

Point Isabel is approximately 160 miles south of Port Aransas, just north of the mouth of the Rio Grande. The President has an invitation to go farther south and fish in Mexican waters, but it was not known if he intended to take advantage of the offer.

The Pulitzer Awards.

The annual Pulitzer Prize awards are recorded and for a week or so the customary debate on their justification will rage in literary and journalistic circles. It is a thankless task which is assumed by the board of judges, for any selection which attempts to meet the definition of "distinguished" is bound to arouse criticism. De gustibus non disputandum est.

Many, for instance, will question whether "You Can't Take It With You," whatever its merits as a comedy, should have been selected above all others as the outstanding American play of 1936. Somewhat similar doubts will arise in the case of "Gone With the Wind," for all its admirable and absorbing qualities as a three-decker novel of the old school. Judgment in such matters really comes down to what is understood by the adjective "distinguished." Certainly both these awards deserve the definition if the criterion sought is tremendous popularity.

In the journalism awards there will be less criticism, though one looks in vain for recognition of the remarkable objective reporting on the Spanish civil war which certain American correspondents last year accomplished over great difficulties and at great personal hazard. On the other hand, an award beyond cavil, of real political significance, is that to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. It comes for "meritorious public service" in connection with a clean-up of wholesale fraudulent registration in the newspaper's home community.

Another pleasing award in the journalistic field is that which singles out John W. Owens, editor of the Baltimore Sun, for the most distinguished editorial writing of the year. His merited distinction comes happily on the eve of the centennial of this famous paper, first published on May 17, 1837. It is further proof that traditions and prosperity are not incompatible with vigor and independence in American journalism.

Housing And The Budget.

The American Federation of Housing Authorities charges that attempts are being made to sabotage the Wagner-Steagall housing bill by "linking it disingenuously with the current economy drive."

This statement is certainly open to challenge in view of the serious defects of the bill itself. Indeed, it seems more than a little disingenuous to assert that the proposed legislation would cost the Federal Government less than $1,000,000 during the coming fiscal year and would average less than $12,500,000 annually over the next four years.

The way in which certain Congressmen now advocate sweeping cuts in expenditures, regardless of the effect upon essential governmental activities, lends color to countercharges that such economy would be fatal to many desirable proposals. In the present instance the best way to refute such contentions is to look at the terms of the Wagner bill.

The critics do not mention the fact that it would permit the proposed Housing Authority to issue obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States up to $200,000,000 during the coming year, with additional amounts in succeeding years, to a maximum total of $1,000,000,000 on or after July 1, 1940.

Furthermore, the bill provides for cumulative annual grants not to exceed $10,000,000 in any single year. These subsidies might run for 60 years and would be used to pay interest and amortization charges on loans advanced to local housing agencies. The capital for these loans would be provided from the sales of the guaranteed bonds. As the local communities are not required to cover any part of the housing cost, it is more than likely that loans of this type would come to be regarded as "pork barrel" funds, to be scrambled for.

This by no means exhausts the list of deficiencies and defects, such as the lack of safeguards against unduly high building costs and the failure to concentrate efforts upon slum-clearance projects. Even if the country were not at last alive to the necessity for economy, there would be no excuse for hasty adoption of this dubious measure. It would not only add a possible $1,000,000,000 of contingent liabilities to the public debt within the next few years, but it would permit payment of cumulative annual subsidies that within five years might amount to $50,000,000.

There is nothing "disingenuous" in urging delay in committing the Government to such outlays. But it is highly disingenuous to pretend that only "picayune" savings would result from postponement of the Wagner bill.

Senator Byrnes on Economy.

There is nothing very novel in the arguments advanced by Senator Byrnes in favor of economy. But it is unusual and heartening to hear them voiced by a staunch Administration supporter. There has never been any real doubt as to the ability of the Federal Government to solve its budgetary problems. The question at issue has been whether the dominant majority in Congress will admit the necessity of retrenchment and set about eliminating the deficit before it is too late.

Senator Byrnes' vigorous and sincere appeal goes far toward removing such doubts. He points out that the emergency which gave rise to deficit financing is past. Business conditions are as good today as could reasonably be expected. Consequently, as the Senator pertinently inquires, what will we do when another business recession comes along if we cannot even meet current expenses under present favorable circumstances?

His indictment of the lavish scale of relief outlays is particularly telling. The public is reminded that prior to 1932 the Federal Government appropriated no money for relief or work-relief purposes. Those who think $1,000,000,000 would be an inadequate sum for the coming year have let the size of recent expenditures obliterate their sense of perspective. They also forget that the Federal Government is spending increasingly large amounts in relief through the social security program.

There is no questioning the soundness of these general arguments in favor of an immediate and drastic cut in Federal outlays. In fact, the importance of a speedy balancing of the budget is so great that to criticize the details of any sincere economy program is to run the risk of seeming captious. Nevertheless, there are serious defects in the plan to reduce all appropriations, exclusive of fixed charges and relief, by a uniform figure of 10 per cent.

The departments that have conscientiously pared their budgetary demands by cutting out all superfluous items would be unduly penalized by such a procedure. On the other hand, the irresponsible spending agencies would be ineffectively restrained. The result of such an arbitrary decree, therefore, would be seriously to hinder the efficiency of some branches of the Government while failing to insist upon desirable economies in others.

Senator Byrnes himself recognizes the inadequacy of a 10 per cent cut in the case of relief outlays, and urges a reduction of one-third in the current estimates. Perhaps more important than the amount of relief economies is a thorough Congressional investigation to determine where and how savings can be effected without injury to the underprivileged. It would serve little useful purpose to deprive Administrator Hopkins of funds unless he is made to modify the policies that have absorbed such huge sums to such little permanent advantage. Senator Byrnes has suggested one other rational method of economy—that is, insistence that local governments match Federal relief funds on a 50-50 basis.

Whatever the method followed, a determined effort at retrenchment will be required to confine outgo to current income during the coming fiscal year. The only alternative way of helping to eliminate the deficit lies in voting additional taxes.

The Senator, like many others, is opposed to this solution. In his opinion the law of diminishing returns is already operating in the taxation of concentrated wealth. If more revenue is to be produced the Government must resort to the sales tax or to broadening the income-tax base. This significant assertion that the cost of government extravagance must in the long run fall upon the shoulders of the common man is the most effective way to fortify the rising economy sentiment in Congress.

Edward's Tryst.

All the world loves a lover and the Duke of Windsor is, at this moment, no exception to the rule.

It is true that his tryst is on a scale rather different from that in which ordinary mortals indulge. They are seldom able to rush across frontiers to the woman they love, accompanied by 17 suitcases, an equerry, adjutant and butler, a pet terrier (Snooky) and a box of exotic edelweiss to head a long list of gifts. None the less, the difference is in degree rather than kind. Every Tom, Dick and Harry among us has experienced, or will at one time or another, the irresistible suasion of the forces operating on royal Edward.

For that reason the Duke of Windsor, though out of office, is in the headlines again. And from scullery to salon most of us are following the last lap of his exceedingly individualistic courtship, pleased that such romantic happenings can still occur in a workaday world. Even the forwarding of Wallis Simpson's birth certificate from nearby Winchester to France is a matter of moment, though it was carrying proper discretion a little far when the New York Herald Tribune yesterday identified her natal day as June 19, 2896.

By then, one fears, even Wallis Simpson and the Duke of Windsor will be rather completely forgotten. And not even the boldest would care to speculate on the kind of world our descendants will be inhabiting. Only of one fact can we be fairly certain: that men and women will still be falling in love, will still be surmounting all obstacles that keep the path from being smooth, and will for that reason still be objects of interest to their fellows.

In the meantime everyone wishes good luck to the duke and the woman he loves. They wish it none the less sincerely because the couple are no longer youthful, but a middle-aged man and woman, happily, or unhappily, free of the responsibilities which weigh on most of us who have entered the fourth decade. If both of them have missed contentment so far, may they find the bluebird in each other's company.

And if Edward has given a new meaning to the expression "let George do it" nobody except George, in this merry month of May, is going to bother about that.

Crime In The District.

The first annual report of the Washington Criminal Justice Association fully justifies the expectations aroused a year ago, when this impartial and unofficial fact-finding body was organized. Here, written so that he who runs may read, is found a concise and accurate picture of the crime situation in the Nation's Capital.

It is not a pleasant picture. On the contrary the evidence indicates that the report errs on the side of restraint when it declares that the "District has far more serious crime than is healthy for any community."

Obviously something is wrong when, as the Association's figures show, only one out of every three murders committed in the District during 1936 led to a conviction. The situation with respect to other crimes is even worse. The ratio of convictions to reported cases of robbery was only 1 in 10; of burglaries 1 in 12; of grand larcenies 1 in 17. Of 6,818 felonies reported to the local police last year 3,010 were "not cleared" and of the 2,126 actual arrests made convictions were secured in only 685 cases.

It is an easy but far from accurate assumption that responsibility for this poor record is to be laid wholly at the doors of the District enforcement authorities. The W. C. J. A. wisely refrains from reaching any such verdict. Indeed, the present report pays a tribute to "the excellent co-operation which has, from the start, been given the association by every public official engaged in the administration of criminal justice in its several phases." None is more eager than the local authorities to clean up the present crime situation.

But the problem is a tangled one. There is a multiplicity of law enforcement agencies in the District, some of them operating independently of the others. And the efforts of these various bodies in the past have been crippled by patronage appointments, antiquated methods, inadequate personnel and scanty funds.

Fortunately, the will to improve the situation exists. Already through the co-operation of the W. C. J. A. and the local authorities badly needed improvements in the administration of justice have been achieved. But much more needs to be done. As the report points out:

> For the public to allow our police, prosecuting officers and courts to fall short of their full effectiveness for lack of public support or public appropriations is an unwise policy which is terrifically expensive in the long run.

Stolen Thunder.

Senator Byrnes has stolen the thunder of critics of the Government's fiscal policies. He admits the dangers of financing budgetary deficits by piling up Government securities in banks. He acknowledges that a decline in the value of such bank holdings would seriously impair their assets. And, to cap the climax, he concedes that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is itself vulnerable, since its funds are invested in Government bonds.

In the past, Administration spokesmen have tried to gloss over the fact that the public debt has been concentrated to an alarming extent in the banks. It has been considered partisan, if not almost traiterous, to point out that the credit of the Government is not proof against continuous assault, or to suggest that the banking system is not immune against changes in market values of Government bonds.

The willingness to admit such patent facts is the beginning of wisdom—a sign that leaders in Congress are ready to deal realistically with the problems presented by a habitually unbalanced budget. There is no reason to be unduly alarmed by Senator Byrnes' plain speaking. He has simply sounded a most timely warning against continuing on the downward path that leads headlong toward destruction.

There is now real hope of a reversal of policy to stop a process of debt creation which has put nearly 50 per cent of our $35,000,000,000 of Federal debt in the portfolios of the banks. That hope is strengthened by Senator Byrnes' assertion that there is no "breach between the President and the Congress in this matter."

No Vigilantes Wanted.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to comment on the recent letter of Isabel Vickers. Her citation from Plato: "To arouse in all minds a desire to work for better government, better education, a better kind of human existence," is well taken. However, Isabel Vickers' advocacy of "vigilantes," men who take the law in their own hands and work in secrecy, soon leads to flagrant abuse and the opposite of Plato's ideal.

There is nothing new in the idea of organizing super-governmental bands, self-appointed, filled with self-righteousness and above the law. In the South this led to the Ku Klux Klan of unsavory repute, graft and crime. In the Middle West, especially in Michigan, the vigilante idea flowered in the "Black Legion." Wherever it has been tried, vigilanteism has failed to solve the problem of crime.

Our crime problem is not a new one in human affairs. It has its origin in the injustice of our present capitalistic economic system whereby a few lords of finance revel in dissipation while ten million unemployed hunt in vain for jobs. This system can be changed only by peaceful voting into office men who are pledged to a new economic system based upon Constitutional guarantees to life, jobs, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. If we keep on voting for Democrats and Republicans who believe in the divinity of the present economic set-up, we will have crime. The problem is not so simple that the formation of outlaw bands can eliminate it. No such short cut is possible. It is a slower matter of education of the masses.

Politics and graft in certain prisons which Isabel Vickers deplores is merely the result of the profit system and is the logical outcome of an economic system that permits the economically strong to profit from the weakness and disorganized condition of the masses. The C. I. O., the Farmer-Labor movement, etc., are steps in the right direction.

ARISTOTLE.

In Defense of Burlesque.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why so much ado about the shows at Col. Lake's Gayety Theater? The colonel is a man in whom I have the greatest confidence and respect. A man of wit and ever debonair, he would not knowingly offend fair Washingtonians.

As a lover of art, as an aesthete who worships at the Shrine of Beauty, I have enjoyed very much, over a period of years, the so-called "strip-tease" acts at the Gayety. Beauty can always be found at the Gayety. Didja ever appraise the decolletage at a swell banquet at one of our fine hostelries? Well?

However, I must say that some of the comedians should restrain themselves. Now and then a vulgarian appears who is mildly offensive. Ah, if they only had comedians like "Bobby" Clarke or the erstwhile Abe Reynolds—men who obtained laughs through subtlety and not pure slapstick.

It would seem to me that if a man wants to reach Dante's Inferno via the strip-tease highway, let him. The churches of this city and some of the reformers would do well to learn more about the blighted areas, the tuberculosis rate and the lack of playgrounds for our children. Selah!

The Republican Minority.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. John D. M. Hamilton's speech on May 1 was interesting, as showing that the Republicans have at last come to the realization that they are a minority party. However, there was still a note of dissatisfaction in his statement that they do not have sufficient representation in the Government.

This is a part of the psychology of being a Republican. Somehow they feel that a Republican vote is more important than a vote for any other party. Mr. Hamilton stressed the fact that the Republicans cast "40 per cent" of the total vote. It must be bitter to be out of the Government, when it is remembered that on two occasions, in 1876 and in 1888, they placed Presidents in the White House while the Democrats polled a majority of the vote, and again in 1880 the Republican majority was only a bare 7,000 out of 7,000,000 votes cast.

Mr. Hamilton's description of the duties of a minority party was naive, not to say something stronger—especially in view of the fact that the Democratic Party furnished real constructive minority opposition for 56 years out 72, from 1861 to 1933. Possibly it is beside the point to say that at least a sizable fraction of those 56 years saw Republican rule by armed force and a 5-4 Supreme Court decision. I hope Mr. Hamilton is correct, but since 1933 minority opposition has been simply one long bellyache.

Some friend should really tell Mr. Hamilton to get himself a new ghost writer. His reference to the Administration of John Quincy Adams was unfortunate in view of the circumstances surrounding his election by the predecessors of the present-day Republican Party. And if the classics must be purloined and paraphrased, it would be better not to choose such a well-known work as Boswell's "Life of Johnson."

Political Ills.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Over and above the avalanche of words, phrases and theories thrust at and upon the American people in recent years clearly appears the evident truth, that the American Constitutional Government is not difficult to understand or operate except at such times as its plain purpose is beclouded by deviousness and covered with political barnacles. At present we are troubled about two main ills; namely,

1. Uncontrolled power of the executive.

2. Machine control through appointive power, outside of the civil service merit system.

Both arise out of the grant of unguarded power to the executive and through him to his political allies, in and out of office.

As a preventive and check upon this ever-growing malady two things may be done:

1. Make it impossible for all appointive officers, agents and civilian employes (except under civil service) of the National Government to vote for President, Vice President, Senator or Congressman, thus purging the voting rolls of controlled ballots.

2. Amend the Constitution so that the power to appoint U. S. Supreme Court justices originates with the Senate instead of the President, and that when a vacancy on that Court exists then the governors of the several States may certify to the presiding officer, or clerk of the judiciary committee of the Senate, the name of one qualified applicant; and, in the case of circuit judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals, that a name to be presented by the governors of the various States composing the circuit; and, in the case of district judges, that names be submitted to the Congressmen and Senators of the State wherein the court is located—the Senate only to have the power of appointment.

Red Flags.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Do the Congress of the United States and the people of Washington know that within two blocks of one of our schools red flags flutter unprotected in the otherwise pure spring air?

Unquestionably hundreds of our innocent children pass these tainted symbols every morning. Suppose some child should ask his teacher what a red flag represents. Could the teacher, bound by her sacred duty, give an answer that would be harmful both to her and to her charge? What would you say to your child, Mr. American Citizen?

It is true that in this case the red flags surround a newly dug ditch, but that is beside the point. For indeed might not a group of Communists, seeing their emblem publicly displayed, barricade themselves in this very ditch? Don't most revolutions start from street barricades? Or might not some emissary from Moscow, having a red background provided (yes, actually provided by the taxpayers of Washington), paint a hammer and a sickle on it? Suppose, Mr. Washington Taxpayer, your little boy or girl, running to school, should be confronted with that?

My suggestion is that some patriotic organization, such as the D. A. R., appoint a committee to remove all red flags and substitute white flags (for purity) or blue flags (for truth).

"A Safe And Adequate Airport."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I noticed an editorial in The Post dated April 21, 1937, in which it is stated:

". . . And for some time the larger commercial planes have been avoiding the city, leaving Capital passengers to travel in smaller, local-stop planes. For the Washington Airport's longest runway is but 4,200 feet and there is only one of these."

For your information, the Douglass DC-3 and DST airplanes, which are the largest transport planes in operation in this country, have been operated in and out of Washington Airport by American Airlines successfully and safely since the completion of the hard-surface runways at Washington Airport, and are now in use by Eastern Air Lines over their New York-Miami route. For your further information, the 4,200-foot runway at Washington Airport is the longest paved runway of any transport airport on the East Coast, and, together with the shorter 3,000-foot runway, gives adequate space for take-offs and landings of all the present-day transport planes.

Due to the flood condition, Washington Airport was not in operation for a period of approximately 40 hours, during which time the regular scheduled transport planes landed at either the new Bolling Field or the Baltimore airport. Due to weather conditions all of the major airports of the country are out of operation for a considerable number of days each year. The flood is simply one of those weather conditions which must be taken into consideration at Washington.

National Airport Corporation has expended a considerable amount in order to develop Washington Airport to a degree where the operations officers of the various lines believe it to be a safe and adequate airport for their operations as at present conducted. Otherwise they would not use it, for certainly no responsible officer of a scheduled transport line would knowingly endanger the lives of passengers.

I believe that a complete investigation on your part will enable you to determine that Washington Airport adequately serves the purposes of a close-in airport for transport operations. There is an immediate necessity for an alternate field by means of which the airlines could secure a greater percentage of performance by landing at the alternate field under conditions of low ceiling and visibility.

I hope that in future articles on the subject of an airport for Washington the foregoing facts will be given consideration.

Closing Hours.

Between the lines of a dispatch from Washington it appears that some of the statesmen of the Delaware House of Representatives got pie-eyed on the closing night of this year's session and probably forgot to appropriate the money to run the public schools for the next two years.

The item speaks of boisterousness in the chamber on that night, and boisterousness in American legislative bodies on getaway night usually amounts to a souse party. It is a rite which has almost escaped public notice all this time, usually being dismissed with the words "hilarious scene" in the newspaper accounts, although journalists in Washington, as well as Statehouse men in the minor capitals, privately describe the hilarity as "a great binge."

It is dangerous for a reporter in the press gallery to single out individual members and say that they were drunk, because it would be almost impossible to prove that, and cautious description of the conduct of individuals does not convey the idea.

* * * *

A strict verbatim report of some of the incoherent orations blurbed into the confusion would hardly serve the purpose, either, because most of the statesmen are incapable of constructing a complete sentence even when sober.

Even though a member, or solon, falls on his face in the aisle and is dragged out by the heels, he may indignantly declare the next day that he fainted from overexertion on behalf of his constituents.

Nevertheless, these final exercises are an interesting clew to the character of legislative bodies, and a graphic portrayal might help the citizens to understand their government. The State Legislatures, in particular, need closer attention, the more so in the big States where the Legislature is regarded as a minor body and many citizens do not even know the names of their senators and representatives.

Legislators are almost alone in their right to get plastered while on public duty, for bureau people, policemen, the Army and Navy, letter carriers, and, nominally, even judges, are supposed to keep sober during business hours, under penalty. As to judges, of course, the discipline is less strict, and the honorable court usually is deemed fit for duty if he doesn't fall off the bench.

* * * *

Decorum also provides that His Honor shall not pull his quart out from under the bench and take a belt at the same in open court, but he can avoid that by taking a ten-minute recess and retiring to his chambers for a snort.

In the British Parliament the Labor Party circulates among its members a pledge to keep away from the bar during sessions and take no alcohol until the end of each day's deliberations, which take place in the evening. This was found to be desirable in the face of the fact that some of the noblest old mane-shakers of Queen Victoria's time were two-bottle men, at that, who always keep themselves at the boiling point, but grabbed much territory for Her Majesty, even so.

The party leaders felt, however, that the average member could make enough mistakes cold sober, and reckoned that if the other parties were drunk their party would show to advantage. It is an experiment noble in purpose, anyway.

* * * *

The New York Legislature is expected to adjourn this week, and in view of the mishap to the school appropriation in Delaware the closing session probably will attract unusual public interest.

As a rule, the statesmen sing and utter speeches gently mocking the foibles of their colleagues—which is all right, to be sure, provided they do not forget any important business or pass any laws in a mood of foolishness which abolish "the sacred heritage of Valley Forge," as they are wont to describe the liberties of the American citizen.

The danger of their failing to pass any appropriations seems negligible, and it is almost inconceivable that the Delaware Legislature was drunk to the point where the appropriating instinct failed. Probably it will be found that the lawmakers did appropriate for the schools and just don't remember.

The New York legislators have yet to act on a proposal that they pay the State income tax on their salaries. The boys may get bottled, as usual, on closing night; they may pass a law to legalize burglary as a companion to the dog race and bookmakers' monopoly acts, but though they get absolutely blind, they will never pass that one. That is one instinct that will not desert them though the entire membership fall unconscious.

Constitutional Recipe.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recipe for farm relief, job security and balancing the public budget:

1. Elimination, not regulation, of "reserve" banking and gold purchases.

2. Monetary adjustment (expansion) by statutory rule—not by mandated or delegated power in executive discretion.

3. Controlled by variable tax rates—not by expansive public expenditures.

4. Rate of tax relief controlled by crop prices—not by general prices.

5. Freely competitive interest rates—no manipulation or any borrowing or lending by Government under any circumstances.

This is a constitutional recipe taken from Jefferson—not from Hamilton.

BOOKS

A Mid-Week Review of Current Publications

High Jinks in France

By Denys Smith

ONE can picture the publishers' conference on "The Scandals of Clochemerle." One group of readers were a little dubious. They admired its clever satire of French village life, but, though witty and penetrating, wondered if it would have any appeal to a public not familiar with the classic rivalry between village priest and village schoolmaster, the petty ambitions of minor functionaries and the general political atmosphere of the Third Republic. Maybe, said another group, but even if the general public cannot appreciate the satire they can at least recognize that the central theme is improper. Look how "The Specialist" sold. Call it Rabelaisian, typically French, a book that will appeal to all broad-minded citizens who hate cant and humbug, and they will tumble over each other to get a copy.

This picture is no doubt a gross libel on Simon and Schuster; but they must blame the writers of their advertising copy for it. Potential readers should not be deterred. "The Scandals of Clochemerle" is now more than literary strip-tease.

The book opens on a familiar theme. The Mayor of Clochmerle wonders how he can spend the public funds in a manner which will best redound to his political credit. He consults the schoolmaster, Tafardel, who feels that something should be done about the municipal burying ground, the only public freehold which does not carry the republican motto, "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity."

"Is not that an oversight which plays into the hands of the reactionaries and the cure? Does it not amount to a confession that the dead escape from the jurisdiction of the parties of the left?"

The mayor agreed, but suggested that forward-thinkers should rather concern themselves with the problems of the living. The schoolmaster suggested a public library. But that involved questions of upkeep, keeping track of the volumes borrowed; in short, a public library would be a public nuisance and what the mayor had in mind was a public convenience. "Yes, a building, and a useful one, too, from the point of view of public health as well as public morals. Now, let us see if you are clever, Tafardel; have a guess."

THE schoolmaster guessed correctly and was completely won over when he discovered that this monument to progress was to be erected under the very nose of the church, at a spot which Cure Ponosse' processions would have to pass. The symbols of republicanism and clericalism would be brought into juxtaposition, and "from the point of view of public welfare you simply could not compare them."

At first the mayor's plans for his public relief project ran smoothly enough, supported by the schoolmaster, the tavernkeeper, doctor and others of like kidney. The forces of reaction, represented by the cure, the notary and the Baroness Courtebiche, offered no immediate resistance. A magnificent unveiling ceremony took place, with endless speeches, and a christening ceremony performed by Judith Touzmighon, the village belle. The little edifice grew in popularity and the mayor shared in the reflected glory.

But stationed behind her curtain where she could observe all, Justine Putet, a spinister of "incurable virginity," was shocked and outraged. She finally overcame the 30 years' accumulated inertia of the Cure Ponosse and forced him to denounce "those who have brought impurity to the very doors of our beloved church." Unfortunately the day happened to be the feast of St. Roch, which the profane had been celebrating with copious drafts of red Beaujolais wine. They crowded into the church and shouted defiance. A riot broke out in which the effigy of St. Roch lost its head.

* * * *

FROM that point on the tranquility of Clochemele was destroyed, and the inhabitants ranged themselves in rival camps. Baroness Courtebiche, who had presented the image of the saint, pulled hidden strings and the affair assumed national importance. A detachment of troops were sent to keep order, but owing to the off-duty labors of their captain that merely started a more serious riot in which the village idiot was shot. A Geneva disarmament conference was hurridly adjourned so that the entire French cabinet could handle the crisis.

But that was not all. The whole town appeared to have gone to pieces. One of the Children of Mary was about to become a mother, the notary's daughter eloped with a penniless poet and every little quiet scandal which was harming nobody was brought to the surface, causing endless trouble. A merciful thunderstorm, which the citizens decided must be Heaven having the last word, finally cleansed the town and by destroying the grape harvest brought the warring factions back to their senses. But the little public edifice remained near the church, which leads to the reflection that perhaps Progress and God are but different aspects of the same spirit, each demanding toleration from the other.

AT times the reference to Anatole France on the wrapper does not seem too far-fetched. M. Gabriel Chevallier can strip his puppets of whatever rags of subterfuge and deceit they have been accustomed to present to the world and show them up in a condition of comic nakedness. He has something of a Dickensian faculty for distilling the essential qualities of a class or type and serving them up in the form of a living and laughable caricature. The play and interplay of plot is amusing in itself, and made doubly so by the nature of the little public edifice which sets the wheels in motion. But the satire is often marred by a constant return to the functional purposes of the mayor's masterpiece. Then the style ceases to be robust and becomes a trifle diabetic. The theater of life is not all rest-room.

The book is attractively produced and illustrated with humorous line drawings by Julian Brazelton, while translator, Jocelyn Godefroi, passes the essential test of disguising the fact that the work is translation.

"THE SCANDALS OF CLOCHEMERLE," by Gabriel Chevallier. (Simon & Shuster, $2.50.)

A First Novel and a Second

Millen Brand Paints Strong Scene in His Debut.

"THE OUTWARD ROOM," by Millen Brand. (Simon & Shuster, $1.25.)

Millen Brand has taken the title of his book from a poem by John Donne:

Think then, my soule, that death
is but a Groome,
Which brings a Taper to the outward roome,
Whence thou spiest first a little glimmering light,
And after brings it nearer to thy sight:
For such approaches doth heaven make in death.

In this verse lies the theme of the story of Harriet Demuth, whose eyes are fixed on the glimmering light of death in "the outward room." At the age of 22, Harriet is recovering from the manic depressive cycle into which she had been plunged by her brother's death seven years before. Without her brother, who had personified for her strength and security from the unknown world, her mentality and will to live had been shattered. After seven years in the asylum she still feels spiritually if not physically joined with her brother in death. Her partial recovery is manifested, however, by her desire to leave the asylum—a desire which is in reality an unconscious renewal of the will to live.

This section of the book which deals with life in the asylum and gives Harriet's emotional and mental background is superbly done. A definite mood is established, and the author's eye for significant detail, coupled with his knowledge of contemporary psychiatric theories and procedure, tend toward the production of intensely vivid writing. Few can fail to be engrossed by these pages.

The second section of the book deals with Harriet's escape to New York. The ride under a train, her first fears of capture, her efforts to find a job, her growing realization that money is the key to existence in the city—in all this there is drama. There can be few episodes more graphically described than that of Harriet spending her last nickel to join the destitute and homeless who pass the nights riding up and down on the subway.

At the end of her resources, she is found by a man who at first offers her physical security and, later, the strength of his love. With their physical union, Harriet comes to a positive, if reluctant, acceptance of life. She tells him of her "death in life" of the past seven years. From this time on, Harriet becomes more calm, more hopeful under the routine of everyday affairs and in the normal relationship established with others and with the life of the city as a whole.

Only once does the depressive cycle reassert itself, and then their love has the strength to overcome it. At long last, Harriet hopes to discover what will at last make her well, what will at last free her from keeping faith with her brother. This she finds when her lover is brought into contact with death and demand is made in turn upon her strength.

This story, so concisely and so dramatically written, of Harriet's cure through human relationships and the sense of security and strength derived from others, has a larger application. Mr. Brand, I think, shares the belief of one of his characters, a union organizer, who states that "you can only raise yourself by raising the rest along with you." In other words, human and individual progress is conditioned by the degree of spiritual union and interdependence established between men.

In this respect, it is significant that Harriet's doctor, whose approach to his cases is scientifically adequate, fails to effect her complete recovery. In him she never found the sense of oneness nor the tacit and sympathetic understanding that she discovers in her lover. Science, isolated, falls short of its goal. Only when it is complemented with the qualities found in human relationships can it achieve its end. And in this symbolism we find the significance of the other quotation at the beginning of the book, a quotation from Ecclesiastes: "For to him that is joined with all the living there is hope."

Mr. Brand has written a first novel that will command respect for its penetrative thought, for its dramatic development of theme and for its vivid style. If the characters other than Harriet are no more than flat brush strokes, lacking in depth and roundness, or if the ending is perhaps too neatly manufactured, nevertheless these defects cannot outweigh the distinction achieved in the writing of a novel such as "The Outward Room."

ANNE HOLLOWAY.

William Maxwell Lives Up to Promises in New Book.

greatest tragedy of life is that we stand in daily peril of losing that which is nearest and dearest to us.

Although James is allotted but a bare fifth of the narrative, he presents powerfully the very surge of the crisis, from the moment when it seems incomprehensible to him that he can keep together the family without the aid of his wife, to the time when he gains a road to understanding as he recognizes the survival of the mother and of her shaping influence in the children. Death of his wife brought an understanding to James that he never found while she was alive.

For the first time he really felt that his children belonged to him, that they were of the same blood. More, he saw that "it was what people intended to do that counted—not what came about because of anything they did. And he saw that his life was like all other lives. It had the same function. And it differed from them only in shape—as one salt-cellar is different from another. What had happened to him had happened before." His newly quickened understanding carried him even further until he saw that "it was Elizabeth, who had determined the shape that his life should take from the very first moment that he saw her."

It is not the golden philosophy of "Tom Jones," nor even the consistent development of the theme, which most distinguish Mr. Maxwell's novel. It is rather the success with which he has conveyed the sense of intimate emotion and of crisis in the life of a single family. A wholly subjective novel is difficult to write, but the difficulties are immeasurably increased when the story must be told through the medium of three separate personalities—and by no other means. It is hard to arouse that willing suspension of disbelief in the reader which permits him to reconcile the viewpoint of the child expressed with an adult's power of analysis and description.

That Mr. Maxwell has succeeded in maintaining a unity of tone in spite of the self-imposed difficulties of his medium is a tribute to his skill in composition. His delightful camera eye description of Grandmother Morison as viewed by Robert shows how completely he has mastered his medium:

"She would talk to Robert in a comfortable way about the Lusitania, which seemed to have got connected in her mind with the bombardment of Fort Sumter. And about his Great-Uncle Martin, who owned a cotton plantation in Mississippi. And how if the Southern people had only been nice to the darkies and called them mister and missus there would never have been any war. And about St. Paul. And about Christ who was immersed in spite of what anybody said to the contrary because he went down under the water and he came up out of the water."

"THEY CAME LIKE SWALLOWS," by William Maxwell. (Harper & Brothers, $2.)

When William Maxwell's first novel, "Bright Center of Heaven," appeared in 1934, critics were generous in praise to this young writer, then only 26. They called it "a sort of literary snapshot and a "bittersweet satiric comedy" of "subtlety and a graciously detached viewpoint in dealing with human relationships."

Two and a half years have carried Mr. Maxwell a long way in his experiments with detachment. In a sense, he has come home. He is no longer hampered by the necessity of compressing into the narrow limits of less than a day the story of a social catastrophe occurring in a Wisconsin farm boarding house among a group of oddly assorted people. His new novel, a selection of the Book of the Month Club, is a less artificial and genuinely intimate study of a family in a small town of his own home State of Illinois. The entire narrative is in form a triptych, where in three different, yet complementary, panels the central figure, Elizabeth Morison, is shown to us as seen through the eyes of her two young sons and her husband.

Peter (Bunny) Morison, aged 8½, introduces us to his mother on the Sunday before Armistice Day, 1918, and we learn that she is with child. Her eldest son, Robert, aged 13, relates from his point of view the events leading up to her death in childbirth in a Decatur hospital. We become increasingly conscious of the fact that Elizabeth is the central pivot of action in this family, that she is the compass-point providing certainty for her children in the midst of a bewildering world.

It is not, however, until we share in the crisis through which the Morison family passes upon Elizabeth's death as it appears to her husband, James, that we are brought to the full realization that there is another and even more powerful theme to this novel. It is essentially the motive of "King Lear:" that the Economics

"THE THEORY OF THE LAND QUESTION," by George Raymond Geiger (Macmillan, $2).

Dr. Geiger, in writing on "The Theory of the Land Question," becomes the latest able defender of this Henry George school of radicalism, usually misleadingly called "single taxers." In a small volume of only 200 pages, he ably states the position of those who contend that the Marxists, like the laissez-faire capitalists whom they were founded to attack, are merely temporary symptoms of a more ancient trouble of society, land monopoly.

After pointing out the tremendous importance of the land question in economics, Dr. Geiger discusses the difference in class of value between the products of human enterprise and the land, which is irreproducible; distinguishes between land and capital as economic concepts on the grounds that the supply of land is in general fixed and that its value depends on social rather than individual contributions; summarzies the historical aspects of the question; and discusses the socialization of land rent.

Idealist

"GREY OF FALLODON," by George Macaulay Trevelyan. (Houghton Mifflin, $3.75.)

George Macaulay Trevelyan, the distinguished British historian and personal friend of Grey, has just published a biography of Sir Edward Grey, and reveals himself one of the large group who picture Grey as a far-seeing idealistic statesman.

Trevelyan writes with an unostentatious, meticulous style. Describing his youth at the old Grey estate of Fallodon, the biographer paints in a well-rounded portrait touching on all three of Grey's interests from childhood on; his love of nature, of birds and fishing; his dislike of the growing mechanical civilization.

In spite of a few shortcomings, Trevelyan gives all the material needed to draw whatever conclusions a reader might wish, depending on his political faith; and the great merit of this biography is the sympathy with which he discusses Grey's life, how he reveals its essential, if short-sighted integrity.

High Pride in Spain

By Theodore Hall

AFTER your John Bull, with his girth and solidity—this was when you were young, and beginning to lay figurative flesh and bones around your ideas of a far country—after your essential Frenchman, who was always very gay and a bit wicked, there came next to view your Spanish don. His trademark was melancholy, and above all a stiff, fierce, mannered, courtier pride. By now, certainly, you have been disabused of your notion of the English, and an essay or two of Chesterton's, at very least, have evaporated for you the image of the volatile and irresponsible French. The Spaniard and his pride remain—nor is this quite the innocence of ignorance.

Spain, to us, is still the most foreign of European lands. Consider, from the great novelists to the musicians (the flood of Soviet information need not be mentioned), our ample sensibility toward the Russian; observe the sheer kinship of Scandinavia, or the translucence (thanks to "Arms and Man") of the Swiss, or the ready-to-hand proselytizing of Mr. Adamic on Yugoslavia's behalf. But of Spain we have had next to nothing. Cervantes? There is this line in the book before me: "The sun went out; Cervantes never existed; and the only Quijotes in Spain are the foreigners there in search of Don Quijote." And what does the flowing Amazon of Mexican-Cuban-Chilean-Guatemalan travel books mean but a dependable vein of alienity, strangeness, glamor embedded in the Spanish and sub-Spanish character?

SPAIN.

Yet it would seem we can still make shift with our traditional image of the prideful Spaniard. Jenny Ballou's book, though it can be read in a number of edifying ways, is by no means dimmed by seeing it as a sensitive, elliptic index of Spanish pride.

* * * *

THE book is not one to be defined with a flip of the finger. Mostly, it is a novel—a display of Spanish figures and scenes in the time of Alfonso before his deposition, and of the dictator, Primo de Rivera. Yet here is no novel for the sake of story, but rather an emotional and intellectual assay of certain parts of Spain when it was pregnant with revolution and civil war. Further, the book is not without its articulated philosophy of human rights and needs in this twentieth century.

Threading the scenes of the book is the "I," a young American woman named Rosa, who, on an income, is living four years in Spain while studying Spanish literature, dabbling in journalism and playing the piano a little. She embodies at least the mind of Mrs. Ballou, who has had a like experience, and with that mind working sensitively and reporting richly we come to the core of the diverse scenes before us. Village life in the Guadarrama Mountains, the drawing rooms and cafes and women's clubs of the Madrid intelligentsia, Barcelona during the exposition, country inns and florid boarding houses and expensive salons, all this serves as background for Rosa's study and growing appreciation of the Spanish character.

And the basic element of that character is pride. "A real 'Espanola!'" cries the country woman over Rosa when she puts on a Spanish dress, thus paying her the greatest compliment that a Spaniard can make. The country girl Saturnina, homesick in Madrid, shows Rosa the proper way to hold a water jug, and Rosa notes to herself: "The grace with which a girl carried her jug to the fountain was one of the high social assets of the 'pueblo.'" The rural butcher exclaims: "In this poor little village of ours none of us think . . . Here we are all idiots, of course. We don't know nothing about nothing," and that, too, holds the same simple, though inverted, pride. (His American counterpart would be sitting up nights reading Pitkin, or at least Brisbane, with a kind of desperation.) And at the other end of the Spanish social scale, the country grandee on the train orates to Rosa: "We are a grand, generous and noble race! . . . Nobody knows what a glorious race we are. After all, who can equal us in hospitality, virility, dignity?" That was not staginess in the old gentleman.

AND yet it was not quite true and sound, either; there began to peep out the taint of defensiveness. More would be sickness, indeed, and Rosa had only to listen in the Madrid cafes, to chat with the self-conscious writing ladies and the desiccated, though courtly, writing men, to taste that futility.

On the brink of a revolution which was never closer than when it was least mentioned aloud, the type-form of that twiddling of the liberals was shown in the great Spanish scholar, Jose Ortega y Gasset (the author of "Revolt of the Masses"), who confessed to the P. E. N. Club that he had occupied three days in discussing with himself whether one should say "El orden del dia" or "La orden del dia." Propounds Rosa: "Which three days were those? Were they perhaps the days when 10,000 farmers were beaten and tortured in prisons, because, desperate with hunger, they went to gather the acorns from the fields? Or perhaps they were the days when the workers and peasants in Asturias took 'El orden del dia' or 'La orden del dia' in their own hands and paid for their 15 days' Commune with thousands of lives?" "El" or "La"—such philological problems "were the preoccupations of the knight-errant of Spanish philosophy on the eve of the Spanish civil war!"

If that be a conspicuous example, there was only less of pointless and smothered pride in the Carmens, Celias, Albertos and Dr. Monteagudos, whom Mrs. Ballou eyes so clearly. Two good things of hers, via Rosa, are worth repeating. "I knew," it is written in one place, "that there is in us a hunger to be proud and free before each other, greater even than sexual hunger, and I knew, until we are all liberated so that we can mingle in full joy and satisfaction and respect, without fear of each other, that all the good will in the world will not add one iota to man's stature, that he will continue to creep."

Again: "There will be no equality until there is equality, and until then all friendship and love will be tainted. The forces of wounded pride and misery are the strongest forces in life, and the sediment wells up and poisons the very surface in ways that those above are only vaguely aware of, though they know, all know, that they are poisoned from somewhere."

But these siftings of wisdom are reached only after we have known well a gallery of people, their lives, their characters. In them Mrs. Ballou has searched out the personal roots of Spanish destiny, and it is but the Q. E. D. of a Euclidian theorem that her book ends on a landscape filled with blood-red light.

Events After Prison

Erich Ebermayer Considers Fate of Convict Released After Sentence of Life.

"RETURN TO LIFE," by Erich Ebermayer (Robert M. McBride, $2).

We are all well acquainted with books telling of the "events leading up to the crime" and the conviction of the defendant. But what happens to those people when they are released years later either because of pardon or expiration of sentence, has seldom been dealt with and then only from a social problem point of view. And this book is, above all, not prepared for social workers as such. Rather, it is a psychological study built around George Claasen, Convict No. 813 in the Lengenfeld Prison for the last 22 years, who has suddenly been pardoned.

The events of the present story are encompassed in one day, but in telling about each person there is a flash-back to previous events which, pieced together, give the picture. This method has been too much overworked at times; on the other hand, it must be conceded that personal history and thought processes working backward, are inevitable in dovetailing the angles of a case in psychology.

The scene is laid in Germany, but aside from the use of names, no indigenous characteristics nor political angles are brought in. This is properly so, for this is a situation which might exist anywhere and the people are normal and act quite naturally, with one exception. The love of Claire Matthaus for Claasen is not developed with conviction.

Twenty-two years before, it had been maintained by the prosecution that Kathi Blendl had been pushed over a cliff by Claasen, who was on a picnic with his fiancee, the Baroness Leonore von Creith. Claasen said he didn't kill her, but with no evidence to the contrary, he was sentenced to death. This was later commuted to life imprisonment.

Where the author has delved into Claire's feelings and thoughts toward her family, the writing is tender and lucid, as is that which deals with the efforts put forth by old Kersten, Governor of the prison, to help Claasen. Likewise, the description of Claasen's orderly routine and library work in which he has found complete surcease from pain, is clear and firm. In just such a way do we all instinctively seek protection by burying ourselves in exacting programs.

Marconi, the Synthesizer

Inventor's Radio Genius Described in New Study Written by Orrin E. Dunlap, Jr.

"MARCONI, THE MAN AND HIS WIRELESS," by Orrin E. Dunlap, jr. (Macmillan, $3.50.)

Sir Oliver Lodge, I believe it was, once observed that man will not solve the secret of utilizing atomic energy until his moral sense is developed to the point where he will use that terrific force, not for self-destruction, but creatively, for human welfare. The gods or fate may have had something like that in mind when they selected a simple, peace-loving soul, Guglielmo Marconi, as vehicle for what may be regarded as the world's greatest gift to international understanding and good will—wireless. That other men have commercialized it does not negate the fact that a degree of socialization has permeated Marconi's invention. How much further that socialization will go depends, not upon Marconi's brain, but upon the brains of the social organism, if there be any such creature.

Dunlap shows that Marconi's success was based upon the work of others, as most inventions of value are. The wizard synthesized the results of Henry, Faraday, Maxwell, Hertz and others. Like the great man he is, Marconi pays tribute to them and acknowledges his debt to them—but they did not send wireless messages long distances. They were the "almost" men. He put the perfection touch of genius upon their researches and went beyond them. They played with hidden forces and did not realize their full significance. Marconi had a will—to send messages without wires to long distances.

Though not a mathematician nor physicist, Marconi brought his will and untiring patience to solve a problem that neither mathematics nor academic laboratory science could solve. It took a spirit unconquerable. Marconi deserves all praise, and no one can take it from him.

The book is marred by an attempt at "fine writing." The sentences are too short and choppy, which makes them read as if the author were panting. Too much repetition. Too long. Too much is made of the inventor's "Italianism," despite the fact that his mother was Irish.

HENRY FLURY.

Edward VIII—Boyhood to Abdication

"KING EDWARD VIII, An Intimate Biography," by Hector Bolitho. (J. P. Lippincott Co., $3.)

In this age of speculation and gossip, a competent presentation of the most sensational occurrence of the day is important news.

Hector Bolitho, an authority on the history of Britain's royal family, tells the story of King Edward VIII from boyhood to abdication with sympathy and understanding. The manuscript, nearly completed when the Simpson affair became public knowledge, has been revised and added to, resulting in a clear and sustained interpretation of the events and circumstances leading to the close of the shortest reign in the history of Great Britain.

As Prince of Wales, Edward was the pride of the English people. His popularity was world-wide and his service as England's finest "salesman" cannot be overestimated. The author believes the task placed on the shoulders of the restless and eager Heir-Apparent was inadvisable. To particularize, Mr. Bolitho questions the sagacity of hurrying the Prince off on the first of the empire tours so soon after his return from the unsettling business of war. If he had taken his place in England, where the love and steadying influence of his royal father and mother would have been part of his daily life, in place of the "haphazard, roaming, suitcase existence," the author expresses the belief that perhaps he might not have become oblivious to the superiority of respect over the showyness of popularity. "But the government policy of usage could not wait upon the subtleties of a growing character." The biographer proposes that the government exploitation of the Prince's charm be held to some extent responsible for the tragic termination of his story.

The curtain of the "Intimate Biography" rises on the occasion of a visit to Queen Victoria from the Duke and Duchess of York. The Queen writes in her journal, "Every time I see them, I love them more and respect them greatly. Thank God! Georgie has got such an excellent, useful and good wife."

King Edward VII appears in the early pages. There is great congeniality as well as similarity between little Prince David and his grandfather, who willingly provides a source of escape from the necessary rules and regulations at home.

Charm and compassion are already highly developed characteristics of the little prince. When his younger brother, Prince Albert, yawns at a dull story, "he nudges him and whispers, 'Smile'." He confides to Lord Roberts his impatience to become king so he can "pass a law against cutting puppy tails."

The years pass. The scene shifts to Osborn, Dartmouth, Oxford, where David, now Edward, Prince of Wales, practices his banjo and ukulele until a protest party forms beneath his window, only to go away again holding their ears . . . the Royal Student has produced bagpipes!

With the war comes the first frustration. The Prince's regiment of Grenadier Guards sails without him. "What does it matter if I am shot?" he pleads with Kitchener, "I have four brothers." He is described as "crying with sorrow at the idea of being disgraced." The stubbornness, so significant later on, now shows itself. The prince persists in his entreaties until, a settled line being established, the Field Marshal gives in.

In France, contact with soldiers from Australia and New Zealand fill the young prince with interest in the problems and peoples of the far-away parts of the empire. When the war ends, he is ready and enthusiastic over the idea of the first of the empire tours. The following chapters, filled with the royal triumphs, are among the brightest in the book. Besides being informative, giving a comprehensive picture of the places visited, it is rare entertainment following the prince as he whisks from one amazing "welcome" to another.

With all the adulation showered upon him, his compassion for the underprivileged never wavers. No monarch has allied himself with the poor as did King Edward VIII. He went into their homes, comforted the sick, encouraged the disconsolate. His words of cheer and his friendly smiles remain, cherished treasures never to be forgotten. It is sad to read of the dire interpretations placed on his charitable intercessions, especially the last visit to the distressed areas of South Wales in November, 1936. The author writes frankly and fully on this much-disputed point.

The final pages present the terrific tension surrounding the abdication. Mr. Stanley Baldwin's dealings with the King are freely discussed and he is praised for his tact and efficiency in handling the terrific responsibility placed upon him. Mr. Winston Churchill, after withdrawing his accusations of "extorted abdication" says "What the Prime Minister has proved, namely that the decision taken this week has been taken by His Majesty freely, voluntarily and spontaneously in his own time and in his own way."

In speaking of Mrs. Simpson, Mr. Bolitho uses great restraint. He offers the "hope that she deserves the devotion that she let loose."

Mr. Bolitho asks for a more intelligent understanding of the actual issues involved and his excellent biography goes a long way toward gaining his point.

spector, who accompanied the duke when he left England last December, seized the photographer when he was discovered creeping up to the chateau to look through the dining room window.

On the threshold of his brother's coronation, the Duke of Windsor traveled by rail and auto from his Austrian retreat and reached his fiancee's side with a boyish smile on a now carefree countenance.

What he could not have done as King, he did as a simple British subject. He carried a bunch of flowers to the door of his chosen lady, not of royalty born, and embraced her in full view of onlookers from a world of commoners.

Edward had reached his beloved at 1:45 p. m. They had not been together since the night of December 3, when Wallis slipped from Fort Belvedere and fled to France while the British Empire rocked under the constitutional crisis that led to Edward's abdication.

A motorcycle policeman escorted the duke's limousine from Verneuil, but even so he was an hour behind schedule and Wallis waited impatiently.

Edward jumped from the car, dashed to the threshold and claimed his lady fair. Arm in arm, they entered the great chateau—bedecked with lilacs, tulips and yellow acacia—where a small luncheon party awaited.

The guards were in brightest uniforms. Villagers clustered about the gates. The old lady of the gateway, at the entrance lodge, had put on a bonnet of lace for the gala event.

It had been a gray, chill day until an hour before the Duke arrived, when the sun burst through the clouds.

Nervously eager, Mrs. Simpson had walked during the morning through the garden, while the villagers and newspapermen gathered outside the gates.

Peasants climbed from bicycles and chatted with gendarmes, munched chocolate and bread, sipped flagons of wine. A truck driver hauling live pigs paused for a moment to take in the scene. An English woman tourist dashed about snapping pictures.

The telephoned urging of his fiancee to "hurry" started the Duke on his jubilant journey from Austria late yesterday, after Mrs. Simpson's divorce from Ernest Aldrich Simpson was made final in London.

He traveled in an ordinary compartment with his equerry, and his dog, Snooky, asleep in the wash basin.

Reads Coronation Article.

The Duke had retired at 2 a. m., rose early and over coffee in his room read an English magazine feature on the forthcoming coronation of his brother.

The train made a special stop at Verneuil and at 9:23 a. m. the radiant Edward stepped to French soil to shake hands with a chauffeur sent by Wallis.

There were two limousines and a light truck to carry the Duke, his butler, a Scotland Yard officer and his equerry on the four-hour dash to Monts.

Edward delayed a moment to pose for photographers, then sped away with a wave to the town's guard of honor, three gendarmes and a handful of villagers.

In the truck were a package of edelweiss, the mountain flower; a colorful Austrian peasant costume for his beloved and a mysterious steel box thought to contain jewelry.

May Return to Austria.

There was one indication that Edward shortly might return to the Alpine country, a remark to an Austrian detective who left him at the Swiss border: "See you again in about two months."

Inquiries at the mayor's offices in Tours and Monts revealed no evidence of arrangements for the marriage.

An official of the Tours mayor's office said a wedding at the Chateau de Cande seemed most likely and emphasized that "secret marriages" under no circumstances are allowed by French law.

"The minister of justice," the official admitted, "could probably arrange things for such important personages."

"Aunt Bessie" Cancels Sailing.

New York, May 4 (AP).—Wallis Warfield Simpson's "Aunt Bessie" probably will be among those absent from the coronation in London next week.

Scheduled to sail on one of three liners that took 1,771 passengers, most of them coronation customers, down the bay today, Mrs. Buchanan Merryman canceled her reservations at the last minute.

She now is expected to sail later in the week—probably in time for the Windsor-Simpson wedding in Monts, France.

Witness Asserts Green Unpopular in Bay State

New York, May 4 (AP).—The late Col. Edward H. R. Green was aware, a witness testified today, that his Massachusetts neighbors didn't think very much of him and that he had told her "at that, I don't think so much of them either."

The witness in Surrogate's Court, at the resumption of hostilities in a contest over Col. Green's $70,000,000 estate, was Mrs. Jessie Robeson, of Miami, Fla.

Two women, Mrs. Mabel Green, the colonel's widow, and his sister, Mrs. Hetty Sylvia Green Wilks, are fighting for the fortune. Mrs. Green contends a pre-nuptial waiver of dower rights was invalid.

Strikers, whose walkout has thrown traffic in London into turmoil, offered to provide transportation for the blind who customarily ride the city's omnibuses.

George Wears Crown 4 Times At Rehearsal

Canterbury, Clergy Assist in Practice; King Accepts Marshal's Baton.

By the Associated Press.

London, May 4.—King George VI was crowned four times today in rehearsal of the coronation a week from tomorrow.

After participating in the centuries-old rite of accepting the baton of a field marshal, the sovereign, accompanied by Queen Elizabeth, paid a surprise visit to Westminster Abbey.

Wearing a royal robe over ordinary street clothes, the King rehearsed for two hours with the Archbishop of Canterbury. Queen Elizabeth also wore a royal robe of crimson velvet and ermine. But, as her own crowning was not rehearsed, she spent most of the time watching.

Workmen Watch.

Their audience was a starry-eyed group of workmen in overalls and shirtsleeves who hung over the gallery rails to watch.

"The King didn't seem at all nervous," one of them said. "He was laughing and joking before and after, but while the actual rehearsal was on he was solemn and serious."

The archbishop, accompanied by the clergymen who will assit in the real ceremonies, placed the dummy crown on George's brow until they had the procedure letter-perfect.

Dummy scepters, a dummy orb and dummy swords of state all played their part in the practice.

Seven fully uniformed field marshals attended the ceremonial at Buckingham Palace in which the King received his baton.

The elaborately etched staff, an inch thick and 22 inches long, is inscribed: "His Majesty, King George VI, Field Marshal, 11th December, 1936," the day his brother, former King Edward VIII, vacated the throne of Britain and he succeeded to it.

It is crowned at both ends with chased gold mounts symbolically engraved with figures of St. George and the dragon and wreathes of rose, shamrock and thistle.

Presents Colors to Guards.

As every monarch since Charles II has done, George then presented colors to the King's company of the Grenadier Guards and watched as the 100 6-footers paraded on the palace lawns.

Queen Elizabeth, Queen Mother Mary and Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose also witnessed the spectacle.

Thirty million dollars worth of royal regalia and crown jewels will sparkle in Westminster Abbey at the coronation.

The jewels were removed last week to a jeweler's for cleaning, and are under heavy police guard pending transfer to the abbey.

refreshment, but don't expect to see Mrs. Simpson."

As my country taxi drew up to the villa it was still raining, but the stillness and beauty of the valley below entranced me.

Rogers welcomed me with an amused smile.

"Enterprising, to say the least," was his greeting as he led me to a pleasant room, decorated in good taste and abundant with garden flowers beautifully arranged.

"I told you," he warned, "that you ain't expect to see Mrs. Simpson, but sit down and rest."

"Where is she?" I asked.

"Upstairs, writing letters."

"Countrywoman" Calling.

"Ask her to come down."

"But I know she won't.

"Well, ask anyway. Tell her there's a countrywoman here to see her."

"A countrywoman?"

"Yes. Or if you like, just an American, coming to France just as she did, once, and just as curious."

"Well, I'll try. But I can't promise."

And then the fun began, for in a minute there was a patter of footsteps, a high-pitched but pleasing voice, and Mrs. Simpson herself was holding out her hand.

"I've just had a walk with Souiccance" (her new puppy), she said. "He got awfully wet, and I've been drying him with my hair dryer. What are you drinking?

"Water."

"Water? Well, that's a rule of the chateau, you know. No alcohol before 6 o'clock, but let's make an exception. It's so nice to see you. Souiccance is still at the puppy stage. He needs a great deal of attention."

"I can see that blue is your favorite color."

"Yes. And my favorite mood these bleak, rainy days. You know, we keep a rowboat out there in the field," she explained, pointing out of a window. "When it's submerged, we are sure it's a very bad day. If it shows its nose, we venture out."

Woman-like, she eyed me up and down, studying my attire, and meeting my eyes, remarked generously, "You know, Mr. Rogers told me I should like you. Won't you sit down?"

"What do you do for amusement?" I asked.

"Oh, walk mostly—and write letters. Of course, we have a tennis court and a pond for swimming."

"And what on earth are you carrying a handbag around the house for?"

"Just habit, I suppose," she answered, opening the bag and powdering her small nose.

Her hands have always to be busy. She clasps and unclasps them eternally and has a habit of patting her hair every few minutes. Her fingernails are long and well kept, with no color in the polish.

"How's New York?" she inquired, childishly.

"I don't know. Seems years since I've been there. Do you like New York?"

New York Too "Dusty."

"Yes. But I could never live there. I go there for a holiday, but the dust and noise," shrugging her narrow shoulders.

"Then you prefer Europe?"

She smiled a long, slow smile.

"How do you know what we prefer?"

"But you've been happy in Europe?"

"I am happy just now."

"Will you ever come back to America?"

"I don't know."

"Would you like to?"

"How can I tell?"

"Doesn't this visit—the confidence of an American—give you any thrill?"

"I am living with Americans—Mr. and Mrs. Rogers. And certainly I am happy with them."

"What about your future?"

Fatalist and Gambler.

"Who knows? I am a fatalist."

"And a gambler?"

"And a gambler."

Time was creeping on. Through the wind and the rain came my taxi horn warning me that train time was approaching.

"Guess I must go."

"Must you?"

"If I want to get to Paris, I must."

"Too bad. It's been so nice."

Again her long, cordial hand was extended toward me. "Come again, if only for a little while."

I hated to leave.

By Bob Burns.

I was always known as a pretty good fisherman down home but the last time I visited there I went fishin' one day and couldn't seem to git a bite. Late that afternoon I got discouraged and started home and as I was trudgin' down the road I met my Cousin Pernell. He was carryin' one of the prettiest strings of fish I ever saw.

I said "Pernell, where in the world did you catch that fine mess of fish?" He says "Well, you go down here till you come to a sign marked 'Private Road.' You take that road until you come to a gate with a sign on it that says 'Keep Out.' After you go through the gate you come to a sign that says 'Trespassers will be prosecuted.' You keep on for about 50 yards until you come to a creek where a sign says 'Positively no fishing.' That's where I caught 'em."

Bar Defeated In Juvenile Court Fight

Committee Reports Bill With Additional Safeguards.

Corporation Counsel's Office Is Excluded From Staff.

Social workers won a distinct victory over members of the bar yesterday when the Senate District Committee reported the Juvenile Court bill with a few amendments.

Discarding proposals of Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal that would restore the corporation counsel's office to the court staff, the committee adopted 12 amendments which throw additional safeguards around delinquent children and restrict slightly the power of the judge.

The only major concession made by the social workers, through Senator Copeland (Democrat), of New York, who sponsored the amendments, is a provision that whenever the court appoints a social worker as commissioner to hear a case the appointment must be approved by the District Commissioners.

Upon motion of Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, a provision was inserted to protect children from being taken away from their parents except as a last resort.

Private Court Records.

The committee also voted to have the records of the court opened only to "defendants, their parents, guardians, or their duly authorized attorneys" upon order of the United States District Court.

As the bill will be reported to the Senate the corporation counsel's office will be barred from proceedings of the Juvenile Court except where adults are on trial or invited to participate by the judge.

When public hearings were held on the Juvenile Court bill, as passed by the House, before the Senate District Committee, a number of lawyers attacked the measure on the ground that it eliminated the corporation counsel and gave the court autocratic powers.

Because hearings on the small claims court bill have not been printed, Chairman King postponed action until a later meeting. He explained that some of the Senators who did not attend the hearing wanted an opportunity to review the testimony.

Sub-Committees Named.

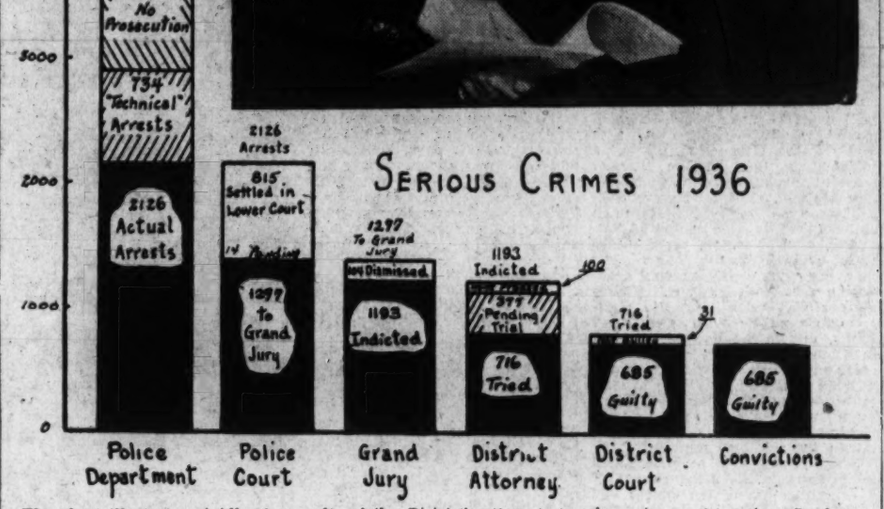
Several sub-committees were named by Senator King to hold hearings on other pending bills.

The two auto inspection bills, one submitted by the District Commissioners and the other by Senator Lonergan (Democrat), of Connecticut, were referred to a sub-committee composed of Senators Capper, of Kansas, chairman; Tydings, of Maryland, and Overton, of Louisiana.

While the committee indicated general approval of a bill to regulate real estate practices in Washington, a sub-committee was set up to consider suggested amendments. It comprises Senators Hughes, of Delaware; Bridges, of New Hampshire, and Capper.

Senator Reynolds, of North Carolina, was named chairman of a sub-committee to investigate several bills to name drives in the Mall for States which have no streets bearing their names now. Senators Hitchcock, of South Dakota, and Bridges were named as his associates.

Box Score of Washington's Crime in 1936



The chart illustrates vividly the results of the District's attempts to solve crime and convict offenders. The inset shows three officials of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, which yesterday reported on conditions here. Left to right, James M. Hepbron, consultant; James Allen Nolan, managing director, and Eugene Meyer, president.

90 Per Cent of Criminals in Washington Escape Conviction, Expert's Report Reveals

Justice Group Charges Inefficient District Administration.

of criminal justice, he declared, is paramount if conditions are to be improved.

"Crime," said Hepbron, "is like any organized business. Take the profit out of that business and the bottom collapses. Figures show that crime is more firmly established than legitimate business."

Washington, as the Nation's Capital, Hepbron said, should be a model for other cities. There is, he added, a definite need for more policemen.

Assails Bond Coverage.

Professional bondsmen in Washington, the report showed, are operating far beyond their financial means. In many instances, bondsmen have signed bails many times the value of property pledged.

A case cited by Hepbron showed one bondsman had outstanding bails totaling $176,600, as compared to assets of but $19,825.

Of nine bond records investigated, only two professional bondsmen had full coverage on bail money pledged, the report declared.

"In Police Court," Nolan asserted, "bondsmen are permitted to write bonds up to twice the assessed value of unencumbered property, and in the United States Commissioner's Office and Juvenile Court there is no limit to the amount of bonds which may be written."

Eugene Meyer Speaks.

Eugene Meyer, president of the Criminal Justice Association and publisher of The Post, cited lack of co-ordination among the city's numerous police agencies. He recalled earlier proposals to merge the Metropolitan and Park Police forces in an effort to promote greater enforcement efficiency.

The time element between actual arrests and final court action was described by Hepbron as a major factor in efficient crime control. Speedy trials after suspected criminals are apprehended is necessary if conditions are to be corrected, Hepbron declared.

Nolan's report cited from seven to eight weeks as the average length of time for a case to be presented to the grand jury and tried in the courts after an arrest. However, the report showed 340 cases—or 43.5 per cent of 800 cases traced—were tried within five weeks.

Comparing the time element with overcrowded conditions in Washington penal institutions, the report stated:

"In recent years, because of conditions in the antiquated Washington Asylum and Jail, there has been considerable discussion about the time involved between arrest and final disposition of cases. Prior to 1936, the District Court was closed, except for pleas of guilty, during summer months, and it was believed that this accounted for the high population of the jail."

The criminal in Washington has a 3-to-1 chance of escaping apprehension after committing murder, report figures indicated. In a total of 63 reported murders during 1936, investigations resulted in only 22 convictions, the report said. And of the total number of reported murders, arrests were made in 54 instances. Of these arrests, 49 suspects were indicted by the grand jury.

Burglary Record Poor.

The record of burglary, it was pointed out, was by far the most unfavorable. Of 2,747 burglaries reported, only 288 convictions were returned. For this type of offense, 652 arrests were made and 329 prisoners were indicted.

As a result of the association's survey and in an effort to eliminate "Willie Pye" arrests, Maj. Brown recently made several shifts within the Detective Bureau. Numerous officers were reassigned and transferred.

There was no effort by the association to compare Washington with any other city. Such a practice, Hepbron pointed out, often presents a wrong picture. In many instances, he added, Washington is unlike any other major city, and comparisons would not be practical.

Maj. Brown and his assistant, Inspector L. I. H. Edwards, were lauded by the association for "wholehearted co-operation."

With the exception of treasurer, all officers of the association were re-elected. Vincent Saccardi was named treasurer, succeeding Edward C. Baltz, who resigned.

The officers are:

Speaker Explains New Method in Recording Sound

An improved method of recording sound magnetically on steel tape, similar in principle to that of the Paulsen telegraphone, was explained yesterday by Dr. C. N. Hickman, of the Bell Laboratories, in demonstrations before the Acoustical Society of America meeting at the Bureau of Standards.

The method, as now improved, will make a single record last forever. Conversely, a song or speech recorded may be completely erased, making possible new recordings as often as one pleases. Its reproduction is remarkably clear and it is expected to be of special use in the study and the business office.

First practiced by a Danish college professor in 1900 and then allowed to lapse until the Bell Laboratories explored its possibilities, the "magnetic recording" principle is based on the fact that modulations in the voice cause variation in a steel tape or wire. Within the steel, millions of tiny magnets are made with varying fields of force. When the wire is again passed under a magnet, the original sound is produced.

House Group Strikes Blow At Basin Site

Memorial to Jefferson at Tidal Basin Banned Under Proposal.

Keller Says Public Opposed Commission's Plan.

A body blow against plans to build the Thomas Jefferson Memorial at the Tidal Basin was delivered yesterday when the House Library Committee voted to report favorably a bill which forbids use of that site.

Meeting in executive session at the call of Chairman Kent E. Keller (Democrat), of Illinois, the committee took the action which Keller predicted last week when hearings were concluded on the measure. Its sponsor is Representative Allen T. Treadway (Republican), of Massachusetts, ranking minority member of the library group.

Keller asserted he intends to draft a comprehensive report, based on information obtained in the hearings and on other relevant data gathered by the committee, which will inform the House of overwhelming sentiment against destruction of the Japanese cherry trees at the basin.

e also will report that the costs of the proposed memorial, as planned by the Congressional committee headed by Representative John J. Boylan, would be far in excess of the $3,000,000 authorized.

"Public sentiment is definitely against the proposal of the memorial commission," Keller said.

"We realize that the Commission of Fine Arts approved the plan, but the public, because of sentiment regarding the cherry trees and the beautiful contour of the Tidal Basin reflecting these blossoms, is vigorously opposed to the use of that site.

"The question of expense in making this area a fitting setting for the proposed memorial is important, but we found during our hearings that sentiment was more powerful than cost considerations.

"The large additional expenditure estimated, which we consider excessive, compelled us to take action. We were influenced also by the fact that Frederick Law Olmstead, only surviving member of the McMillan park commission of 1901, wrote us a powerful denunciation of the plans for the Tidal Basin site.

"We expect that our report will definitely put an end to any future development of the basin area for a memorial. We are assuming full responsibility for thus going contrary to the McMillan plans."

Northeast Fire House Dedicated By 500 Citizens

A ten year campaign waged by Northeast Citizens' Association was won last night when a $75,000 fire house was dedicated at Rhode Island avenue and Fourteenth street northeast.

Almost 500 persons turned out for the ceremonies which were followed by a band concert, refreshments and a dance.

Mrs. Worrell to Head Citizens' Group Again

Mrs. Margaret H. Worrell last night was re-elected president of the Columbia Heights Citizens Association for the sixth time.

Other officers chosen included John M. Botler, first ivce president; A. B. Carty, second vice president; Mrs. Rosie Wender, third vice president; W. I. Swanton, secretary; William C. Strauss, treasurer, and George H. Brown and Mrs. Marie F. Maddox, delegates to the federation.

Trolley Car Kills Man; Traffic Toll For Year Now 41

The 1937 traffice toll for the District mounted to 41 last night when an elderly man died beneath a street car.

Henry Kittinger, about 65, of 916 First street northwest, the victim, was struck as he attempted to cross at First and H streets northwest. It required more than 5 minutes to remove his body from beneath the car, which was in charge of Motorman Floyd Little, 30, of 203 C street northwest.

Physicians at Sibley Hospital pronounced Kittinger dead on arrival. The death total from traffic at this time last year was 34.

Five-year-old Betty Tinsman, of 602 H street northeast, was cut and bruised late yesterday when she was struck by an automobile driven by Jacob Fravel, of 55 M street northwest, in front of her home. Doctors at Providence Hospital said her injuries were slight.

George B. Gummell, 19, of 4210 Leland street, Chevy Chase, Md., was killed instantly yesterday when an automobile in which he was riding crashed over an embankment near Kensington, Md.

He was riding with Dowd C. Rozzelle, 19, of Alta Vista, Md. Officials said Rozzelle swerved his car to avoid a collision. Gummell was pronounced dead at Georgetown Hospital. Rozzelle was cut and bruised.

Dirksen Bill Asks Two-Men Crews on Cars

Measure Offered in House Revives One-Man Trolley Controversy.

The one-man street car controversy, which has subsided somewhat among local civic groups, yesterday appeared likely to be revived on Capitol Hill.

Representative Dirksen (Republican), Illinois, introduced a bill to require each street car and bus with a passenger capacity of more than 30 passengers to carry a crew of two men.

Dirksen, who frequently rides the street cars and buses himself, said he believed that operation had been slowed up and made less efficient by an increase in the number of one-man cars.

Amends Act of 1908.

His bill seeks to amend section 16 of the act of May 23, 1908, by inserting the following language:

"Each car or bus with a capacity of more than 30 passengers shall have a conductor or other employe in charge of the vehicle in addition to the operator of the vehicle."

Traction officials said that such a requirement, if invoked, would necessitate two men on all street cars and most of the modern buses, such as those used on the Chevy Chase route. All buses are manned by a single operator.

Labor Groups Complained.

Labor groups and scattered civic organizations complained vigorously last summer when the Public Utilities Commission gave the Capital Transit Co. permission to increase its number of one-man street cars.

The commission held that the change was necessitated by the financial condition of the company and that it would not result in a reduction of speed or efficiency.

Dirksen several weeks ago made an effort to have an investigation of the public utility act made by the House District Committee, but through a misunderstanding his motion was not adopted.

Autoists' Club Protests Rise In Levy Here

2,000 Attend Keystone Banquet; Object to Gas Tax Diversion.

D. C. Deficit Must Be Made Up Some Way, Sen. King Asserts.

Approximately 2,000 motorists gathered at Central High School last night to attend the second annual meeting of the Keystone Automobile Club and to adopt the club's platform, the principal planks of which protest any diversion of the gasoline tax or any increase in levies on motor vehicles in the District.

The 12-point "platform in behalf of the motorist," read by George E. Keneipp, club secretary, was adopted in its entirely. Besides the tax situation, the platform pledged a continued fight on bonding and towing rackets and asked for the formation of a District Traffic Safety Commission and for an increase in the number of local traffic officers.

Senator William H. King, of Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee, told the gathering he didn't favor any increase in the gasoline or real estate taxes but that the $6,000,000 deficit in the local budget could be met only through higher taxation in some form.

In protesting any diversion of the gasoline tax the club asked that stronger legal barriers be erected to prevent use for other than highway purposes of taxes levied upon Washington motor car owners.

Studies completed by the club, it was said, show that the present gasoline tax revenue is "more than adequate" to pay for highway construction and maintenance in Washington during the fiscal year of 1938. The club declared that any increase in tax on automobilists "would undoubtedly lead to curtailed car operation and a shrinkage in tax receipts."

Elsewhere in its platform the club reiterated its opposition to a proposed law which would compel semiannual inspection of motor vehicles and promised to continue its campaign to eliminate the Silver Spring underpass and to relieve traffic congestion at Peace Cross.

The report of William C. Miller, acting chairman of the club's advisory board, showed that the club's membership has nearly doubled since May, 1936.

At the conclusion of the business meeting the members enjoyed an entertainment program which included an organ recital, a concert by the University of Maryland Glee Club, music by an orchestra and ten professional vaudeville acts.

Workers to Protest Impending Lay-Off

Fifteen of the 206 emergency technical employes who stand open for dismissal from the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department because of "curtailed activities in Federal building construction," late yesterday afternoon met in the hall at 806 Seventeenth street northwest to discuss their situation, but decided to make no move until they have been officially notified of dismissal.

The meeting was arranged by the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, and the leaders said they had hoped to pack the hall, but finding the small number present they inferred that "a proper amount of indignation isn't ripe yet and probably won't be stirred until official notices of layoffs are in hand."

Russian Troika Has Color Blind Show Director

Emil Wademoff Combats Handicap With Novel Make-up Box.

By Chanticleer

Once in a while a delightful backstage story comes along, and this one is a gem. It has to do generally with Emil Wademoff, producer of the Russian Troika's floor sketches, master of ceremonies and guitarist. Specifically, it has to do with Emil's important duties in the dressing rooms just before the floor presentations. For Emil makes up the performers.

Emil has a carefully arranged color box. It has to be extremely carefully arranged. Emil, you see, is color blind. The only colors he can be positive of are yellow, black and white. (Some one probably will rise now and say that white and black are not colors.) And yet no mistakes ever are made. The make-up is quite professional in every respect.

The secret is entirely the arrangement of that make-up box. Somehow or other the idea sneaks into my mind that some most extraordinary effects could be achieved if some little Peck's Bad Boy got into Wademoff's dressing room and mixed up the paints.

Seen nightly at the Madrillon is Artie Shaw, featured at the Capitol. In fact, the other night Artie joined Johnnie Shaw's Band for a little swinging. "Just to make things go 'round and 'round," as he said. Artie and Johnnie are no kin.

At the La Paree, "Maytime Swing Frolic" bowed in Monday with a gay selection of nightery talent. Featured is the Maytime Trio (Mills, Stone and Wald) in "sophistication on the floor." Miss Stone is a clever acrobatic dancer; Mills and Miss Wald specialize in graceful tap routines, to the tune of "Poet and Peasant." The Maytime Sextet adds considerable to the eye appeal and Lila is with us again with a Russian character dance.

Spanish Embassy Hits Relief Agency

The Spanish Embassy here yesterday charged that the "American Committee for Spanish Relief," is a misnomer for "Spanish Fascist Relief," and that it is "absolutely identified with the causes represented by the rebels in Spain."

"It is the duty of the Spanish Embassy," a spokesman asserted, "to call the attention of the public in general to the fact that loyal Spain, the Spain now fighting on the side of her government, not only is not represented in this committee, but declines as well all possible help, whatever its nature might be, proffered by organizations such as the American Committee for Spanish Relief, which its record suggests is operated under the guidance and inspiration and for the benefit of rebel Spanish elements."

Interstate Male Chorus Arranges 45th Concert

Under the direction of Clyde B. Aitchison, the Interstate Male Chorus will give its forty-fifth concert tomorrow evening at 8:30 in the departmental auditorium, Constitution avenue at Thirteenth street northwest. Ina Holtzscheiter, soprano, will be the guest soloist. Accompanied by Marjorie Davis, she will sing an aria from "Carmen" and a group of songs in English, including Hageman's "At the Well" and Bantock's "The Feast of Lanterns."

This is the second concert of the seventeenth season of the Interstate Male Chorus, which numbers some 40 officials and employes of the Interstate Commerce Commission and a few neighboring Federal agencies. Dr. Aitchison, who has conducted the organization since its inception, is a professor of law, has written many articles on railroad management, and composed music as an avocation.

The program tomorrow night includes Elgar's "Land of Hope and Glory," Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh," and Mair's "Suomi's Song." Ross Farrar, tenor soloist at Washington Cathedral, will sing the part of Ione in Dudley Buck's "Chorus of Spirits and Hours." The program closes with Stewart's "Forging the Anchor," in which Charles Wood sings the barytone solo. Robert Feuerstein is the accompanist, and Harold M. Brown is in charge of the concert arrangements.

La Paree's 'Sophisticated Trio'

Mills, Stone and Wald are on view at La Paree this week in a complete routine of acrobatic and ballroom dances. Each of this versatile trio is a specialist.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

District of Columbia Federation of Music Clubs presents a choir festival in Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church South on Tuesday evening. Program sung by Mount Vernon Place Methodist Choir (Deane Shure, director), Hamline Methodist Choir (John Marville, director), First Congregational Choir A Cappella (Ruby Smith Stahl, director), Calvary Methodist Choir (Louis A. Potter, director), and Takoma Park Presbyterian Choir (Lottie L. Volkmer, director).

In observance of National music week, five church choirs successively occupied the loft in Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church South last evening in the presentation of choral works under their respective directors, and combined forces at the close of the concert in an effective reading of Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus" under the leadership of Eva Whitford Lovette, president of the District Federation of Music Clubs. The audience was made welcome in a brief address by Mrs. Vincent Hilles Ober, newly elected president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

An occasion such as this offers the general public an opportunity to appreciate the quality of choral singing which is the result of the year-round work of directors and their loyal groups of singers in various sections of the city. Too often this work is taken for granted as a part of the church service, and insufficient credit is given for the careful training and the hours of rehearsal that test the zeal of the directors and the faithfulness of the singers.

Last evening's concert afforded the auditors enjoyment of some excellent singing. It is not of the essence of this report to single out any one choir for particular commendation, but rather to congratulate all the participants upon the showing of their accomplishments. Competition was not a factor in the program which symbolized co-operation in the service of music.

Deane Shure conducted his Mount Vernon Place choristers in Nathaniel Dett's "Listen to the Lambs" and the "Alleluia" from Haydn's "The Creation." John Marville led the Hamline Choir in Herschel's "Morning Hymn," Bach's "At Thy Feet," Grechaninovs setting of the Lord's Prayer, and Jacon Handl's "We Sing With Joy."

A "Gloria" by Palestrina, a "Nunc Domittis" and "Gloria" by Grechaniov, and Nobel Cain's arrangement of "Roll, Chariot, Roll" were the offerings of the First Congregational Choir A Capella, led by Ruby Smith Stahl. Louis A. Potter directed the Calvary Methodist Choir in Snow's "The Temple of My Heart," Rakhmaninov's "To Thee, O Lord, Do I Lift Up My Soul," and the "Inflammatus" from Rossini's "Stabat mater."

Lottie L. Volkmer conducted the Takoma Park Presbyterian Choir in Palestrina's "Come, Let Us Worship," the fifteenth century Moravian hymn, "Peaceful Night," and Deane Shure's "O Silent Hills." The participating organists were Edith Gottwals, Edith B. Athey, Louis Potter and Elizabeth B. Jackson.

Zakharov Work Wins Corcoran Popular Prize

Visitors Differ With Art Experts in Selecting 'Ballerina.'

Feodor Zakharov's "Ballerina," a full-length portrait of a girl ballet dancer, was the most popular picture in the Corcoran Art Gallery's fifteenth biennial exhibition of contemporary American oil paintings, a tally of several thousand votes showed yesterday.

For winning first place, Zakharov, a New York artist, will receive the "popular prize" of $200.

Next most popular in the voting, which took place from April 26 to May 2, was Charles S. Chapman's painting, "Alice through the Black Bottle." Third largest number of votes went to "Testimonial," painted by R. H. Ives Gammell.

Zakharov's portrait shows a ballet dancer poised on her toes. Visitors acclaimed the almost photographic detail with which the portrait was executed.

The artist was born in Russia and is a graduate of the Moscow School of Painting, Sculpture and Architecture. Now a United States citizen, he lives in New York City.

Oddly, none of the pictures chosen by a committee of art experts as the best in the show were leaders in the popular voting. The exhibition will continue until Sunday, but will be open for the last time during the evening hours from 7:30 to 10 o'clock Friday.

Mark Lansburgh Made Store Vice President

Mark Lansburgh, for many years secretary and store manager of Lansburgh & Bro., local department store, has been elected a vice president of the organization, it was announced yesterday. He will continue as secretary.

Austin S. Donaldson, formerly associated with leading New York City department stores, has joined Lansburgh's as store manager.

On the Air Today

Several additional special programs in connection with the coronation of King George VI are announced by the National Broadcasting Company. Perhaps you will want to make note of two of them for advance listening. "On and Off the Coronation Route," a microphone tour of the line of march the royal procession will follow May 12, with interviews with cabbies, shopkeepers, policemen and soldiers, will be presented Saturday, at 3:30 p. m., from either WRC or WMAL.

In the course of this actual coronation rehearsal, N. B. C.'s microphones will take the radio audience to a public house, the King's Arms, out in London's East End, in Commercial road, where local color and interviews with the guests will be heard. There'll be a community sing of "God Save the King" by a large audience in the Troxy Cinema, at Piccadilly Circus, and music by military bands.

Sunday, at 9:30 p. m., WRC, will be presented "The Crown Jewels," a dramatization of the stories and legends about the jewels including the legend of St. Edward's Crown, stealing of the Crown Jewels by the monks of Westminster Abbey, the Black Princess Ruby and the story of Captain Blood who stole the jewels after the restoration. The dramatization was written by Frank Wilson, author of "Appointment at Westminster."

The "rehearsal" broadcast, of course, will be heard from London by short wave; the crown jewel broadcast will be presented from New York studios.

* * * *

Many calls are being received from persons who ask at what hour of the day the coronation will be heard. I do not know. However, the short waving of programs incident to the coronation will begin very early in the day and will continue well into the afternoon. Later in the week I will attempt to obtain as accurate a schedule for Wednesday of next week as possible for both the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia net. (Mutual, with which WOL is identified, also will provide coronation programs.) As soon as this information is assembled it will appear in this space. The Sunday Post's radio page, incidentally, will provide listeners with a diagram on the London area to be covered in the procession and will indicate where American announcers are stationed as you hear their voices.

Feathered Indian Weds Here; Bride In Modern Dress

Gay in the ancient, feather-topped garb of the Chickahominy tribe, Mike Little Bear, 32-year-old Indian, married his modernly dressed Indian sweetheart in the Methodist Building yesterday. The bride was smartly clothed in gray.

The ceremony was performed by Dr. James Shera Montgomery, chaplain of the House. Bombarded with inquiries by the curious, Mike preserved the traditional Indian impassivity and referred his questioners to Chief O. W. Adkins, who accompanied him and the bride, Hazel May Adkins.

Women Barred As Movie Strike Grows Tense

Are Ordered From Picket Lines; Actors' Guild, Producers to Meet.

By the Associated Press.

Hollywood, May 4.—Five nonstrikers went to hospitals with serious injuries today after two outbreaks of violence in movie labor troubles.

A crowd of 30 men battered down the doors of the office of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employes and beat several men seeking studio employment. Four were sent to the Hollywood Receiving Hospital, suffering multiple cuts and bruises.

Police said they did not believe the raiders were members of the striking federated motion picture crafts. They had damaged the office and disappeared when police patrol cars arrived.

Men in the office of the alliance, which is not on strike, were being signed up for class D labor in the studios.

At Universal studios, John Kline, nonstriking worker, was set on by men he identified as pickets. He also was sent to a hospital.

Hotel Strike Inactive.

San Francisco, May 4 (AP).—Opposing sides in San Francisco's hotel strike maintained an inactive siege today.

From the office of J. J. Schlaepfer, spokesman for the operators of 16 strikebound hotels, came the statement: "There is nothing doing here."

Union leaders said: "We are prepared to hold out as long as two months, if necessary."

Steel Compnay Signs.

Pittsburgh, May 4 (AP).—Chairman Philip Murray, of the steel workers' organizing committee, said tonight one of three conferences during the day with representatives of independent steel companies had produced a contract with the union.

Hubbard & Co., employing 700 workers at Pittsburgh, Murray said, agreed to sign a collective bargaining agreement.

Hudson Workers Strike.

Detroit, May 4 (AP).—A strike at the Hudson Motor Car Co. plant halted production for two hours today, three days after the signing of an agreement between the company and the United Automobile Workers of America.

Florida Ship Canal Termed War Aid

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Swanson told the Rivers and Harbors Committee yesterday the proposed Florida ship canal would be of value during war for shipment of materials for both military and commercial use.

Swanson in a letter said, "• • • I have no doubt that the proposed canal by shortening the distance and providing an additional route for sea-going vessels between the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic Ocean would be of value during war to the shipment of necessary material for both military and commercial use."

The committee received testimony yesterday from Gen. Charles P. Summerall, the Army's former chief of staff, and Rear Admiral Frederic E. Bassett, retired hygrogapher of the Navy.

Fleet Clears for Action In Pacific War Games

Aboard Battleship Pennsylvania, Mid-Pacific, May 4 (AP).—Torpedomen of the United States Fleet cleared for action tonight as the crucial stage of the 1937 war games neared.

Flying Fortress Joins War Force on Pacific

March Field, Calif., May 4 (AP).—A flying dreadnaught—huge, four-motored bombing plane—roared onto March Field after a nonstop flight from Barksdale Field, La., today to join the Army's massed air forces for three weeks of sham battles in the skies.

Pan-American Nations Study Money Parley

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

The Pan American Union has taken steps toward calling a monetary conference of the 21 American republics, it was learned last night.

L. S. Rowe, director general of the union, which is composed of all the nations in this hemisphere, has sent formal notes to member nation asking each if it considers this "a propitious time" to convoke such a meeting.

The communications were in conformance with a resolution adopted at the Buenos Aires Peace Conference last December which directed the union to determine "whether it would be opportune to hold a meeting • • • to study and endeavor to bring about monetary stabilization and the termination of the systems of exchange control."

Guatemala and the Dominican Republic have replied favorably to the proposal. The United States, however, was said to be reluctant to participate.

The United States' position may be more clearly shown, it was indicated, with the return from Great Britain on May 15 of Roving Ambassador Norman H. Davis who has been abroad exploring the international monetary situation. Another arrival deemed significant is Cesar Charlone, minister of finance of Uruguay, who lands in New York today.

The Uruguayan government sponsored the resolution at the Buenos Aires conference.

U. S. Is Losing Control of Time, I.C.C. Complain

States Usurping Federal Authority on Daylight Saving Plan.

will soon be adopting a 75-minute hour or a 22-hour day?" moaned Pyne.

There was no specific complaint against the Sacks bill—in fact, it wasn't even mentioned—but it is the general trend of State and municipal governments to choose what time they please, regardless of the National complications, that has the I. C. C. fretting.

Ever since 1931 the commission has been calling Congress' attention to the country's crazy quilt time pattern, and now the point has been reached where Capitol Hill is asked either to put teeth in the act of March, 1918, or else take the Federal Government out of the time-regulating business altogether.

World War Action.

Uncle Sam entered the business by popular demand during the World War. Daylight saving time had been adopted in Europe as a fuel-saver and to step up industrial production.

For two summers "fast time" was in effect nationally, only to be repealed in the late summer of 1919 as the result of voluminous protests by farmers, dairymen, coal-miners and others who didn't relish starting the day's work in darkness.

President Wilson, a strong supporter of the wartime innovation, vetoed the repealer, but was overridden by Congress. National daylight saving time ended—the last Sunday in October, 1919.

"I guess the railroads are about the only ones who pay any attention to the standard time zones any more," Pyne said.

Local Regulation.

The repealer of 1919 merely amended the wartime act, killing the daylight conservation section and allowing the Federal Government to remain in the regulatory field.

The trouble today is, as Commissioner Aitchison points out, that the local governments are doing most of the regulating, with harmful effect on interstate commerce. The old adage that "time and tide wait for no man" has been knocked askew by New York, Chicago, Massachusetts and other cities, and States.

A decade ago a group of opponents of the Massachusetts daylight saving law sought to enjoin State officials from enforcing its provisions on the ground that it conflicted with the Federal law and therefore was unconstitutional. When the District Court held no conflict existed, an appeal was carried to the Supreme Court, which affirmed the decree.

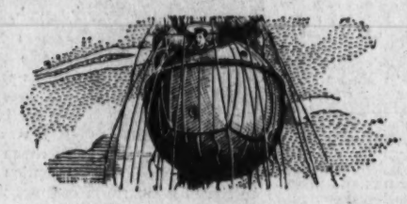
Lucky BUDWEISER! Fermented in sterile air . . . in spotless, glass-lined tanks . . . in new and ultra-modern buildings fortified by costly filters against the intrusion of impure air. No microscopic organism present in ordinary air can interfere with the work of our priceless, pure-culture yeast. Expensive? Yes, but our ideals demand it — and every sip of BUDWEISER proves its worth.

Lucky you! No effort is spared to give all of you BUDWEISER.



The temperature in the stratosphere is cold—and uniform. The temperature where BUDWEISER ferments is cold—and uniform. Low temperatures make fermentation slow and thorough. Shall We Dance At RKO-Keith's Is Gay Musical Astaire and Rogers Are at Top of Form in Picture With Gershwin Score.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"SHALL WE DANCE." RKO-Radio picturisation of a screen play by Allen Scott and Ernest Pagano, adapted to the screen by P. J. Wolfson, costarring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, with Edward Everett Horton, Eric Blore, Jerome Cowan, Ketti Gallian, William Brisbane and Harriet Hoctor. Directed by Mark Sandrich; music and lyrics by George and Ira Gershwin. Reviewed at RKO-Keith's Tuesday night.

It seems to me that there is not enough of the Fred Astaire dancing in this subject to make it the top of the string that he and Ginger Rogers have played. There are, however, extenuating circumstances that may have had something to do with it.

For example, considerably more stress than usual has been placed on the matter of romantic plot and comic situations—not farcical situations, but those that might reasonably grow out of the events depicted on the screen. There is a bit—and I say only a bit—of dramatic substance to "Shall We Dance." It has a lilt and a tempo that are more attuned to the light musical stage than to the pictorially comic movements of farce.

There is a great dancer who wishes to demonstrate his art and his ardor with one particular young woman. Her name is Linda Keene. She is an American and the scene of the opening sequences of the play is Paris. Things go on and on, as they do in musical comedy, whether picturized or not, and finally all works out well—except for those who sit anxiously awaiting the time when Fred and Ginger will break into one of their long and intricate routines. That time seems never to come.

Harriet Hoctor Stars.

There is a bit of the Astaire artistry on the hoof, so to speak, notwithstanding the fact that there seems not to be enough. In the closing scenes of the film he executes a ballet number with Harriet Hoctor, who ranks with Patricia Bowman as the foremost ballerina of the contemporary theater, that makes plain what a clear right he has to be known as one of the native theater's greatest masters of choreography.

Fred Astaire is not limited to the tap dance as a medium of expression. He is the personification of grace and exerts a comprehensive command of the full scope of the Terpsichorean art that is little less than amazing.

The story of "Shall We Dance" is a flimsy sort of thing, at best, but it carries the many reels of the picture satisfactorily and provides many moments of hilarious humor, due to the presence in the cast of Eric Blore and Edward Everett Horton. Mr. Horton here has much the same sort of part as he played so well with Fernand Gravet and Joan Blondell in "The King and the Chorus Girl." The British Mr. Blore is once again the silly ass sort of fellow that he does perhaps better than anyone else on the current screen, scoring his greatest hit in a telephone colloquy that is convulsing.

Six Songs Click.

There are six song hits scattered through the action of the comedy, including "Slap that Bass," "I've Got Beginner's Luck," "They All Laughed," "Let's Call the Whole Thing Off," "They Can't Take That Away" and "Shall We Dance," which, of course, is the title song of the picture. All are written in the best Gershwin manner and have a swing to them that is practically irresistible. Most of them are sung by Astaire, but Miss Rogers chimes in with "They All Laughed" and also has a voice in a good many of the choruses.

Harriet Hoctor, remembered for his appearance as ballet dancer in "The Great Ziegfeld," in her one comparatively brief appearance, again demonstrates that she is among the foremost artistes that this country can boast in the field that was made famous by Mlle. Genee, Pavlowa and others who have preceded her in the same school.

National

Pirandello once wrote a play about six characters in search of an author. Happier is the lot of the characters so delicately and firmly limned by Ruth Draper at the National last evening. They are characters who have found their perfect interpreter and evocator.

Internationally minded in her sketch groups, Miss Draper brought to life on the National stage a Parisian actress, an English lady with a garden complex, a miner's wife, an old Maine woman and a couple of the giddier specimens of urban female.

Heavier drama comes on in "The Miner's Wife" presented in two sections, the first at a cottage in the morning and the second at the pithead many hours later after a disaster. The first section is satisfying, but the fine mintage of the Draper characterization somehow failed to give its customary full ring in the tragic climax. There was sound and fury, but hardly spirit.

BELL.

The dark-haired star made a brief statement in which she thanked the studio for the "consideration and understanding shown me in the past six months" and said she looked forward to further association with M-G-M, under the personal guidance of Louis B. Mayer.

No announcement was made as to what story had been chosen for Miss Shearer's next vehicle, but it was believed that either the dramatized version of Jane Austen's "Pride and Prejudice," produced on the stage with such success by Max Gordon, or Stefan Zweig's "Marie Antoinette" would be chosen. Both scripts were prepared for Miss Shearer under the supervision of her late husband, before his death.

It was revealed, during the course of a luncheon at which Miss Shearer announced her intention of carrying on, that she had just before signed a long-term contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the studio with which she always has been associated since the days of her "discovery" by Monta Bell, former Washington newspaper man.

It will be welcome news to her many admirers, who remember the fine quality of her screen work in "Strange Interlude," "Romeo and Juliet" and all of the other excellent things she has done that Miss Shearer has finally determined to carry on before the cameras.

That was a very elegant party—all of his always are—that Carter Tate Barron tossed in Suite 253 of the Mayflower yesterday afternoon, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Wells, personal representatives of Samuel Goldwyn. All of the "show colony" were there and several from the "outside." There were society chatter writers, gossip columners and all the rest. Mr. Wells seemed only anxious that his name must be kept out of the paper and "Woman Chases Man" substituted. That seemed a square enough sort of proposition, so you will find his name absent from these dispatches and that of the picture in—maybe.

For the first time within the memory of this column two premieres are to occur on the same night in motion picture houses under the same management.

On Friday night of this week Loew's Palace and Capitol Theaters—or perhaps they should be mentioned in the opposite order—are to celebrate first times on any Washington screen.

At the Palace, the attraction will be "A Star Is Born," costarring Janet Gaynor and Fredric March, and on the same night the Capitol will break out "Woman Chases Man," the picture that has been announced here once or twice before. This latter subject has Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea as its principal players.

There should be great goings-on on F street that night—something like Broadway or Hollywood boulevard, although I know very little of either, save by hearsay. You probably get the general idea—spotlights, floods, loudspeakers, microphones and all the rest of the usual flubdub.

Linton Wells, as goes without further saying, after what already has been said before, is here as personal representative of Samuel Goldwyn, to be sure that "Woman Chases Man" chases itself across the screen in prime order. It no doubt will.

* * * *

There has been a bit of discussion lately about sanctum as to the relative merits of Cornelia Otis Skinner and Ruth Draper, currently at the National, as proponents of the una-drama. This is a matter in which this department refuses to become involved. Miss Draper has her own field of individual portraitures that are done with incomparable skill, and Miss Skinner has her more elaborated dramatic studies that are executed with no less technical and dramatic ability. Whichever one you like the better, you like the better. And that is that, so far as we are concerned.

* * * *

It will be of interest to the matinee-idol chasers—or maybe I have the hyphen in the wrong place—to know that Broderick Crawford, son of Helen Broderick, one of the foremost comediennes of the stage or screen, will arrive in Washington today at noon. He is one of the featured players in "Woman Chases Man," that Sam Goldwyn opus that you may have heard about.

Young Mr. Crawford will be in town for several days. Line forms at the right with those autograph books.

In case you don't remember, Helen Broderick, the kid's mother—and he is in the vague neighborhood of 23, at that—is the sterling feminine comic who has been teamed with Victor Moore of late in such things as "We're on the Jury," and the like. She has been here on the stage in a long list of hits including the "Little Shows" and whatnot.

Since we have seen Keenan Wynn, son of Ed Wynn, here a couple of times this season, it will be fun now to have this offspring of a distaff funmaker of the first rank.

* * * *

This ugly business of censorship has reared its head again. They are shooting at everything but the kitchen stove, and, agreeing with my learned confrere, Mr. Andrew Kelley, of the Times, I feel that the principal trouble with official supervision of the stage and screen is the scattered manner in which it manifests itself. There is no uniformity; no logic in the thing. Let the law be applied to all alike and there would not be very much complaint. As it is now, there is too much. I am on the side of law, order, decency and all the other valuable attributes that the present agitators seem to indorse, but I would like to know a little more definitely where they stand. I'll probably be standing there, too.

Spring-Fever Note.

Yes, yesterday was another lovely day—except for that Linton Wells luncheon!

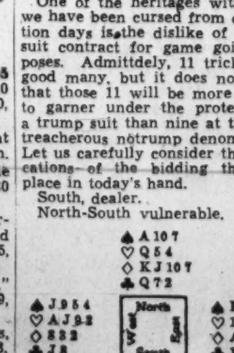
Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

Selecting the Right Contract.

One of the heritages with which we have been cursed from old Auction days is the dislike of a minor suit contract for game going purposes. Admittdely, 11 tricks are a good many, but it does not follow that those 11 will be more difficult to garner under the protection of a trump suit than nine at the often treacherous notrump denomination. Let us carefully consider the implications of the bidding that took place in today's hand.

South, dealer.
North-South vulnerable.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ◇	1 ♠
2 ◇	2 ♠	3 N T	Pass
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

The two bids that are highly important in this discussion are North's two notrump and South's three notrump. Let us take them up in order.

After his partner's opening bid and free raise to the diamond response, North has no conceivable rebid except the one actually made, namely, two notrump. True, the opponents have bid and supported Spades and North has only one sure stopper in the suit, but this may be ample to insure nine tricks at notrump. Moreover, if South holds even the guarded Jack of spades, North's A-10-x becomes a double stopper. North's two notrump bid does not guarantee two spade stoppers and for that very reason must be considered as a tentative or exploratory bid.

Now let us appraise South's three notrump bid. South should most decidedly not depend on North for two Spade stoppers. There is no reason to assume that North's one diamond response showed such a suit as A K x x x, but even if he had that holding and a spade stopper, only eight tricks were visible (five diamonds, two clubs and one spade). South had already shown a pretty good hand by the combination of his opening bid and his immediate free raise. Whatever he did in the future could not efface the message already conveyed and, therefore, South should have taken action over the two notrump bid that would be of a less definite, less final nature. Three diamonds would have expressed his holding and intimated his fear of notrump. North then would have supported the clubs and South, on the assumption that a 4-4 diamond suit would be better as trump than a 5-3 club suit, should go back to diamonds, with five diamonds the final contract. Obviously, three notrump was doomed to defeat, whereas five diamonds could not be defeated except by the unlikely heart opening.

It Somehow Doesn't Seem Possible!

These gay and frolicsome young people would be Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea, as they appear in "Woman Chases Man," a new screen comedy soon to be seen locally. This is said to be one of their most enlivening vehicles. One might almost gather as much from the picture reproduced above. They seem to be having fun!

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, May 4.—Today I am going to chat about something apart from the movies, yet of Hollywood. Married men especially will be interested. I want to tell you about a new club here in the colony. It is called "Hours of Freedom, Ltd.," and the membership includes Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie, Gary Cooper, Richard Arlen and yours truly. Perhaps our wives do not take it seriously but we husbands do.

GARY COOPER.

John Miljan originated the idea quite by accident. He and Mrs. Miljan were playing cribbage for small stakes. He won. She lost. Jokingly, he demanded his winnings. Mrs. Miljan said, "I have no money except what you give me. The only way I can pay is to give you a day off to do just as you please." Maybe those were not her exact words, but they express the idea. Her proposal established the basis upon which the Miljans now do all their private gambling. When he loses, he pays cash; when he wins, he gets an hour off for each five dollars.

* * * *

I believe it was Crosby who suggested that husbands should form a club and follow Miljan's lead, and to date it has been a success. Wives like it because they have nothing to lose; their husbands would probably sneak the hours off anyway. Husbands like it because they no longer must sneak; they can win free hours honestly at cribbage, rummy or dominoes.

At this writing, I am 11 hours up and $35 down to Mrs. Fidler. I am saving the "ups" for a two-day fishing trip next summer, if I have not lost so much money in "downs" by then that I cannot pay for the trip.

* * * *

Private irks: Movie magazines that praise poor pictures (thus fooling their readers) because studios take one-page ads.

Dick Powell's refusal to regard the distress signals of overwork, and as a result of turning into a grumpy individual.

Gossips who start whispering about each new screen child: "He is really a midget."

Adolphe Menjou's demand of $25,000 to indorse a breakfast food after he had freely admitted, "It saved my stomach and my life."

John Barrymore's escapades.

* * * *

I wonder if Charles Chaplin remembers that day, back in June of 1919, when a pig-tailed girl with frightened eyes approached him in the lobby of the then swank Alexandria Hotel and asked for his autograph? Charlie took out a notebook and pen, scribbled a caricature of himself, signatured the work of art, and gave it to his delighted fan with "Here's something to remember me by." I saw the picture yesterday. It is richly framed and is a cherished possession of the little girl, now grown to womanhood. In 1919, her name was Sallye Eilers, but it has been simplified since then.

BERNHEIMER'S

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

After Short Acquaintance Girl Desperately Loves Man Whose Actions Mystify Her; She Asks Advice.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am desperately and really, for the first time, in love with a man whom I have known for about five months. I know that he loved me—or was a very good actor. He is 27, good looking, has a wonderful personality and makes friends very easily. He isn't particularly thoughtful and is very independent. He was always a perfect gentleman and treated me almost like a baby. I am 21, considered good looking and have always been rather popular, although I never cared about any boy (aside from the usual "crushes") until I met him.

* * * *

He is from Pennsylvania, and after I'd known him about two months he began going home on week-ends. I was the only girl he dated during the week, I think. He said his mother was ill and wanted him to come home. Every week-end after that he went away, and if I said anything he would get frightfully angry. Always during the week he acted terribly crazy about me, but when Saturday came he was gone. He claimed it was a relaxation from work, as his family and friends were there, and that he didn't feel at home here. If he doesn't, what am I to him? I feel that he loved me, yet he said he "didn't want to!"

* * * *

I know nothing about him except my own impressions, and I am a little suspicious that he might be married, judging from his actions on week-ends. If he is, Miss Haworth, I want to know it. Should I go to a private detective agency and get a report on him, or have him shadowed? I can.

* * * *

Last week we were invited to a wedding and he was to call for me. He failed to call at all, thus inconveniencing me considerably. I called his office and learned he wasn't out of town. The very next evening he called several places trying to locate me; one place being my aunt's home. On recognizing his voice, she called him down for his actions of the previous evening. I realize it was none of her business and that I should never have mentioned it to her. Since then I haven't heard from him. It is the first time he has failed to call.

* * * *

Is there anything I can do without sacrificing my pride, for this I will never do. My aunt's words probably struck home and perhaps he feels guilty or is married and thinks it is all getting too much in the family for safety. What do you think?

* * * *

If he is too sure of me and needs some sort of jolt, what can I do? I know he was engaged to be married once, and that the girl turned out to be "common," so he says. He tries to act as if he is against women. Please try to analyze my problem. ANXIOUS.

What to Believe.

DEAR ANXIOUS: How to uncloak the mystery of this man's background is not your real problem, as I see it. Your only problem is how to recover, speedily and completely, from your mad infatuation with him. Already you know him to be emotionally unstable (his furious tantrums and erratic lovemaking tell that), as well as undependable and secretive. It's just as well your aunt did give him a piece of her mind, and that your family is waking up to the fact that something is wrong with the picture.

* * * *

I wouldn't know—from his actions—whether or not he is married. It is reasonable to suppose, however, that there is another woman in the background. She may be an old sweetheart, a fiancee, some girl he met and fancied that first week-end he went home to see his ailing mother, or even an ex-wife whose love he is trying to recapture. If the latter, maybe he hadn't seen her for months until that bedside visit home, had thought himself free of her spell, and met her again only to find he wasn't. He may have a divorce pending and be trying to avert it. If he were married it doesn't seem logical that he would remain away from his wife for several months, fall in love with another girl (namely, you) and thereafter promptly decide it was his duty and delight to go home every week-end. And yet it may be so.

* * * *

The fact that he has made stormy love to you without revealing his hand; the fact that he doesn't intuitively recognize your love as entitling you to the real and whole truth about himself; the fact that he rages when you mildly question his contradictory actions; the fact that he breaks engagements without prompt and penitent explanation, all show him to be an unfair, untrustworthy person of no particular ethics.

* * * *

You don't really love the man or you would trust him completely, no matter what he did. Implicit trust is an inalianable characteristic of youth's true love. Your impulse to have him shadowed is symptomatic of frantic jealousy, an offshoot of physical infatuation.

* * * *

If you feel you must ferret out the truth, it seems to me it would be more dignified to have some member of your family act as investigator, rather than put hirelings on his trail. To do the latter would be to damn yourself forever in his eyes should he ever find out, whereas any right-minded family is justified in acting openly to inform itself about the eligibility of an unknown older man who is paying disturbing court to a girl of 21. Why not make a clean breast of your fears and infatuation to your aunt and ask her help in clarifying the situation?

* * * *

Inasmuch as the man, as described, isn't deserving of complete devotion; and inasmuch as you don't know what factors in his background you would be called upon to deal with in winning his whole heart, it doesn't seem worthwhile to attempt to plot a campaign to that end. In your position, I would demand a complete explanation of and apology for his mysterious conduct—the broken engagement included—before consenting to see him again. If you take a firm stand in this regard, and he is at all interested in you and can afford to be honest, he will be. If he doesn't meet such a demand, it will be because he doesn't dare to or doesn't think you worth unbending to, or perhaps a little of both. If you don't insist on an understanding, you are holding yourself too cheaply. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Proposal for Court Reform Widely Discussed in Europe

MRS. CHARLOTTE A. HANKIN.

Mrs. Charlotte A. Hankin, Legal Research Expert, Completes Study Abroad; Finds Women Making Great Advances.

WHEN Mrs. Charlotte A. Hankin returned to the United States this week following a year's study in Europe as a crusade fellow of the American Association of University Women, she began to hear on every side a familiar argument. It pertained to the "nine old men."

"It was nothing new to me to hear persons arguing about the Supreme Court," she said yesterday at her office in the Woodward Building, where she is associated with her husband, Gregory Hankin, in legal research. "In Europe people were arguing about as heatedly as they are over here as to whether or not the court should be enlarged and what the age of retirement should be."

During the last ten years together with her husband, Mrs. Hankin has made an intensive study of the workings of the Supreme Court. She was awarded a fellowship last year to make a comparative law study in Europe of the question of judicial review over governmental action. Her court studies were made in Russia, Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, France and Great Britain.

After all these studies, what conclusions has Mrs. Hankin reached as to what should be done about the Supreme Court in this country?

In true academic manner she avoided a pat answer when the question was put to her. In general the courts in Europe are too different to be compared to the Supreme Court of the United States, she pointed out. But this much she would say—no European higher court exercises power over legislation to the extent the American court does. In European countries where dictators do not exist the legislative body always has the final authority.

The retirement age for judges throughout most of Europe is from 65 to 70 years, Mrs. Rankin found. In France until recently the age limit was 70 years. Now a law has been passed to permit judges of the highest court to remain on the bench until they are 75.

With the exception of England, salaries of higher court judges are much lower in Europe than in the United States, Mrs. Hankin found. The English judge of the Privy Council, corresponding to the American Supreme Court judge, gets about $30,000 a year. But in Russia for instance, Mrs. Hankin said, the salaries of the judge are about the same as those of "good mechanics."

Despite the back-to-the-home movement in Germany and Italy, Mrs. Hankin found women in many European countries making strides economically and politically. That was particularly true in the field of law.

"Although French women are still fighting to get suffrage," she said, "they are very happy in their economic and professional privileges. A large number of French women are practicing law, a profession that is especially suitable for them since in France the law office is always in the home. French women are able administrators and those who are engaged in law or other professions find it easy to carry on their home life and professional life at the same time.

"In France there is no discrimination against married women workers and many of the French women I met were shocked—and even incensed—to learn that in some parts of the United States married women were not permitted to teach school. French women are studying law, medicine and the sciences in increasing numbers and are meeting no opposition from men in these pursuits. Nearly every French women lawyer I talked to was married and had a family."

In Russia, Mrs. Hankin found many women serving as judges in all types of courts. She estimates that about 35 per cent of all the judges in Russia are women.

"There is no woman problem in Russia as we know it," she said, "because there are no discriminations of any kind against women. That was one reason the Russian women weren't especially interested in our conference of the International Federation of University Women which met in Poland. They could not see the point of having a meeting restricted to women."

Czechoslovakia, Mrs. Hankin regards as one of the "most alive and stimulating" European nations today. It also has many women judges and lawyers. In Budapest, Mrs. Hankin attended an international meeting of women lawyers. She was in Italy three weeks but found little public activity there on the part of women.

While Fascist philosophy is seeping gradually through Hungary, it is not making any headway in England, France, Czechoslovakia or the Scandinavian countries, Mrs. Hankin reported. Women of these countries, particularly, will always oppose it, she believes.

While the terror of war looms heavily over the spirits of European women, Mrs. Hankin said, they have not lost hope for peace.

"Watching Spain as they do, terrified that any moment the blaze there may become a general European crisis, they still cannot believe it possible that the horrors of 1914 will have to be relived," she said. "Their chief source of hope is America. They look to this country, which holds the balance of power to do something to halt the catastrophe that threatens them and the world."

On arriving in Washington on Monday, Mrs. Hankin attended the session of the Supreme Court. She was met in New York by her husband and 12-year-old son.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, May 4.

CAN YOU IMAGINE 30 Morgans—and I mean the Morgans— in one room? That's what transpired here a few days ago at the biggest gathering of the money clan in its history. Wouldn't you have given your red boots with the copper toes to have been behind a screen—just to hear what 30 head of Morgans talk about when en famille?

ALICE HUGHES

The 22-carat party was thought up by the brilliant Anne Morgan, sister of the present head of the tribe, and it was held at her Colonial red-brick home which stands, as solid and durable as the banking house, at 3 Sutton place. Shining black limousines drew up one by one, emitting their cargoes of top-hatted, dinner-gowned Morgans. Dinner promptly at 8. Two policemen were on hand to see that the neighborhood urchins did not shy dornicks at the gleaming toppers.

The occasion was the 100th anniversary of the birth of J. P. Morgan the elder, founder of the family fortune, which took place in Hartford, Conn. A terrific personality, he is supposed to have left $100,000,000 when he died in 1913. He was far more colorful than any of his children, saving only Anne herself.

All Morgan parties break up early, and long before midnight J. P. was safely tucked in at his Murray Hill home. As a neighbor and fellow-Murray Hillbilly, I was a little hurt that the jamboree was not held at his old brick house on Madison avenue. But it was Anne's idea, so I made no complaint—aloud.

* * * *

I am constantly excited by the way these young store girls plunge headlong into literary careers. I had for a dinner guest the other night Thelma Stroebel, a pretty maiden, who writes fashion ad copy for a Brooklyn emporium, and has just seen her first novelette appear in Cosmopolitan.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

Kidney Remedy.

AMONG NEWER remedies recently tested out by the medical profession, the use of mandelic acid in kidney infections appears to be quite successful.

Its discovery came about in a somewhat peculiar way. A few years ago it was shown that a high fat diet which produced certain organic acids in the system was beneficial for epilepsy and certain other conditions. It was noticed in clinics where it was extensively used, that if a mild kidney infection was present, the release of the acids in the kidneys tended to clear up these infections.

Since the high fat diet is not healthy for a normal person, a search was made for acids which would perform the same function. The desire was to find an organic acid which could be administered by mouth and excreted intact in the urine, and also that it should kill off bacteria. In the course of this search mandelic acid was found to have these qualities. It kills off bacteria in the urine in about 80 per cent of uncomplicated cases.

By uncomplicated cases we mean those in which there is no considerable destruction of kidney tissue, or abscess formation. Mild infections of this kind are particularly common in children, particularly infection by the germ which ordinarily lives in the large bowel.

We have a large number of drugs which are able to kill off these germs in ordinary cases. Among the first of these to be used was uratropine. Another one, and much the best until mandelic acid came along, was pyridium. To this group mandelic acid is a welcome addition.

J. H. S.: "Has there been any advance in the research work on the association between aluminum and cancer?"

Answer: There has been no advance because there has never been any research work done on the subject. The idea never had the slightest shadow of scientific support. That aluminum is perfectly harmless is indicated by the fact that aluminum is more and more supplanting other metals in dental work as a substitute due to the present scarcity of gold. It hardly is possible that dentists would agree to put into the mouth a substance which they thought would cause cancer.

Prize Awaits New Chocolate Food Creators

CHOCOLATE—"food for the gods"—is one of the most popular flavors of American foods. This flavoring, which is really a food in itself, noted for its energy-giving qualities, is the subject of The Post's Weekly Recipe Contest.

Perhaps you have a chocolate recipe that you consider worthy of a cash prize. If so, enter it in this contest and you may win one of the awards, which are $3 for first prize, $2 for second prize and $1 for each of the three additional prizes.

Yours may be a recipe for chocolate cake or pie or chocolate pudding or candy. Or you may have a good method for making chocolate mousse or ice cream or chocolate bread or waffles. Recipes for chocolate eclair or chocolate milk shake may be entered in this contest as well as many other ideas.

Copy your recipe clearly and send it to Rebekah Blake, The Post Food Editor, so she will receive it not later than Saturday noon. Be sure to copy your name and address on your recipe.

Only one recipe will be accepted from each contestant.

White Jackets Give Distinction To Dark Frocks

BLACK AND WHITE—the infallible combination for giving a woman distinction—will continue its popularity through the summer. One of the smartest expressions of this combination is the white jacket and the dark dress. So, if you want to be noticed—and remembered—get yourself a black linen, pique, chiffon, marquisette, even a lightweight black wool, in event you are taking a journey, and then top it with a white jacket.

These white jackets, worn with dark frocks, may be tailored or frivolous. The jacket, above, with white wool, designed by Robert Piquet, is distinguished for its tailored semifitted lines and its triangular shoulder pockets. It is made without collar or lapels and has four buttons down the front. It is worn with black frock, shoes and gloves and a black novelty sailor hat.

Many little white boleros will be seen on dark dresses as the season advances. Linen embroidery and silk pique are among the materials used. Elaborate ligerie trimmed boleros are effective to dress up a dark frock for afternoon.

Movie Star Appears In Smart Linen Suit

Linen time is here again and Rosalind Russell, movie star, has made her appearance in a dressmaker suit that has no rival for smartness. The dress itself features a fitted bodice and circular skirt. The bodice, of navy blue, tops the skirt of gray. A belt of fire-engine red patent leather encircles the waist.

Over this is worn a full-length, fitted coat of gray linen, with back collar and turned-back cuffs in navy blue. Gray pearl buttons serve as fastenings.

Crab Loaf Recipe Is Winner In Sea Food Contest of Post

Planked Fish in Jelly, Tuna Fish Roll Sublime and Stuffed Fish Roll All Are Popular in Coastal Area.

By Rebekah Blake.

IT IS NO WONDER that Washington, located near the Potomac River, the Chesapeake Bay and the Atlantic Ocean, is noted for its seafood. Consequently, many interesting and unusual recipes were submitted for the Sea Food Recipe Contest, held by The Post last week.

The first prize, $3, was won by Mrs. Rose J. Hart, 214 Massachusetts avenue northeast, for her recipe for crab loaf.

Miss Marie E. Moran, 2416 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, won the second prize, $2, for her recipe for planked fish in jelly. The third prize, $1, went to Mrs. Joseph W. Ireland, 719 Third street northeast, for her recipe for tuna fish roll sublime, and the fourth prize, also $1, was awarded to Mrs. Max S. Steinberg, 1401-B Buchanan street northwest, for her recipe for stuffed fish rolls with spinach goldenrod. The fifth prize, $1, went to Mrs. William Hughes, 120 Quincy street, Chevy Chase, Md., for her recipe for deviled crabs.

Here is Mrs. Hart's recipe:

Craf Loaf.

2 pounds crab meat
2 large sliced tomatoes
½ cup butter
Salt and pepper
1 egg
1 sprig parsley
1 sprig thyme
1 onion, minced
2 cups well-soaked bread crumbs

Mix the crab meat and the crumbs and mince well. Add well-beaten egg and salt and pepper and mix well. Melt two tablespoons of butter, pour into the mixture, add onion and thyme. Put this mixture into a frying pan in which a tablespoon of drippings has been placed and cook for ten minutes. Mold the mixture when cold enough to handle. Butter a large baking dish, lay loaf in it, place the tomatoes over the top, add a thin layer of bread crumbs over this and bake 25 minutes. Decorate with parsley and serve.

Miss Moran's recipe:

Planked Fish in Jelly.

Clean fish. Cut from 2 inches above tail to the head. Take out backbone and stuff with ¾ cup cracker crumbs, ¼ cup melted butter or oil, ¼ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, few drops onion juice, 1 tablespoon minced parsley. Mix these ingredients, stuff fish, sew up, brush over with butter or oil, cover bottom of baking pan with water. Bend fish in S shape. Bake 45 minutes in a 375 F. oven. Take up; cool. Dissolve 1 package lemon gelatin in 2 cups boiling water; pour in baking pan, stir, strain. Season to taste with Worcestershire sauce. Put cooled fish in deep pan. Pour in jelly when it begins to thicken. Chill in refrigerator. Unmold on platter. Put tomatoes stuffed with cucumber mustard dressing around the mold.

Mrs. Ireland's recipe follows:

Tuna Fish Roll Sublime.

Sift 2 cups flour with 4 teaspoons baking powder and ½ teaspoon salt. Blend with 4 teaspoons butter. Stir in 2-3 to 1 cup milk. Knead lightly on well-floured board. Roll in sheet 2-3 as wide as long. Combine 2 cups tuna fish, 1 cup medium white sauce and 1 egg slightly beaten. Spread on dough. Roll as jelly roll. Brush with milk or melted butter. Bake in hot oven (425 degrees F.) about 30 minutes. Serve hot with stuffed olive sauce.

Stuffed Olive Sauce.

One-fourth cup sliced, stuffed olives in 1 cup highly-seasoned cream sauce.

Mrs. Steinberg's recipe:

Stuffed Fish Rolls With Spinach Goldenrod.

Minced onion
Butter, salt, pepper
1½ pounds fish fillets
Cooked spinach
2 hard-cooked eggs
Toss bread crumbs and onion in a little melted butter, season with salt and pepper, spread with bread mixture, roll and fasten with toothpicks.

Place filets on oven-proof platter, brush with butter, bake in slow oven, (300 degrees F.) for 30 minutes. Arrange hot cooked well-seasoned spinach around fish rolls. Garnish with chopped eggs, or with eggs forced through a sieve. This serves six people.

Mrs. Hughes' recipe follows:

Deviled Crabs.

Make a cream sauce in a double boiler of 1 cup of mil.., a piece of butter the size of a walnut, 1 egg and a heaping tablespoon of flour. Season with a pinch of mustard, a pinch of red pepper, a little salt, a little sugar. Add chopped parsley (the sauce should be very thick.) Stir in 1 pint of crab meat. Fill shells or put in baking dish. Bread crumbs may be used for thickening if mixture is not stiff enough. Sprinkle bread crumbs rubbed in butter over the top. Brown in quick oven. This amount fills six shells.

Bright Basque Jackets Introduced for Evening

From Vienna comes the fashion of bright little basque jackets for evening wear. Anita Louise, movie actress, received one from a friend abroad with the word that they were all the rage in that city of the waltz. Some of the jackets are cotton print and others silk.

Anita's is a pastel print on white cotton and laces up the front in the peasant fashion with a bright green cord. The shoulder line is widely extended, but the sleeves fit tightly. The jacket is particularly attractive over a billowy waltz frock but wouldn't be a half-bad idea to top a swing skirt for spectator sports wear.

Many Members of Society of Colonial Dames Guests at Tea Held in Garden of Georgetown's Historic Dumbarton House

Luncheons and Other Functions Feature Annual Meeting.

The sun-flecked gardens of historic Dumbarton House were the scene of the tea given yesterday by the District of Columbia Society of the Colonial Dames. National headquarters of the society, now holding its biennial council meeting in Washington, are maintained there.

Heading the receiving line, just inside the doorway, was Miss Agnes Peter, president of the District, who wore a navy blue silk dress and a matching hat. With her were Mrs. Joseph P. Hutchinson, the national president, and Mrs. William Wilmer, a member of the board of the society. Mrs. Hutchinson wore a black crepe frock with a flowered bodice and matching cape and a large pink straw hat. Mrs. Wilmer was dressed in black with a black hat.

Guests wandered through the rooms, which contained many fine examples of early American furniture, including a beautiful secretary in one of the drawing rooms. Tea was served inside and punch in the garden, at one end of the stone terrace. The garden looked at its best with tulips and hyacinths in full bloom. Comfortable chairs were placed on the carefully kept lawn.

Mrs. Cazenove Lee Pours.

Among those who poured tea or served punch were Mrs. Cazenove Lee, chairman of entertainment for the convention; Mrs. Wilson Lee, of Silver Spring, Md., whose white skirt was topped with a brilliant green jacket; Miss Aimee Powell, in a brown silk print frock and yellow hat with a small veil, and Mrs. Charles Willcox, in black.

Guests during the afternoon numbered several hundred, and among those present were Mrs. James Harriman, Miss Julia Hunt, a member of the committee; Mrs. L. A. Magraw, of South Carolina; Mrs. Stanley Reed, who had with her Mrs. Kennedy Helm and Mrs. Mason Barrett, from Kentucky, Mrs. Reed's home State; Mrs. Granville Gray Valentine, of Richmond, president of the Virginia society; Mrs. Frank Keefer, also of Virginia, and Mrs. Austin Kautz.

Yesterday was very busy for delegates to the convention. One of the events was a luncheon given by the Georgia delegation at the Shorham for Mrs. Clarence G. Anderson, of Savannah, a national vice president.

Out-of-Town Guests.

Among the out-of-town guests at the luncheon were Mrs. John Kirk, Train, Mrs. Wayne Patterson, Mrs. S. D. Sanford, Mrs. John B. Whitney, Mrs. Shelby Myrick, Miss Mildred Cunningham, Mrs. J. Randolph Anderson, Mrs. Camm D. Dorsey, Mrs. Philip H. Allston and Mrs. Frank F. Jones, all of Georgia.

Guests from Washington included Mrs. Charles Adamson, Mrs. Carl Brown, Miss Louise Hart, Mrs. G. Forster Harley, Mrs. Rufus Weaver, Mrs. Charles A. Hunt, Mrs. Edward G. McCarmick, Mrs. Dilham Morrow, Mrs. Arthur Nash, Mrs. G. V. W. Pope and Mrs. Benjamin F. Weems.

Mrs. Edward M. Townsend, of New York, a member of the Sulgrave Manor board, gave a travelogue entitled "The Washington Country" at the evening session of the society in the Gold Ballroom at the Shoreham.

Rhode Island Affair.

Mrs. Hutchinson and other national and State officers were guests of members of the Rhode Island delegation of the Colonial Dames at a private dinner in the Supper Club room at the Shoreham.

The committee in charge of arrangements, assisting Mrs. Walter S. Ball, of Providence, R. I., State president, consisted of Mrs. Frederick S. Peck, of Barrington, R. I., and Mrs. Thomas E. Steere and Mrs. E. Colt Anthony, both of Providence.

The Washington town committee of the North Carolina Society gave a luncheon at the Shoreham in honor of the State president, Mrs. J. Walter Williamson, and the North Carolina delegatoin to the biennial council. Mrs. Albert Pike is chairman of the committee.

Events scheduled for today include the laying of a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier by the Massachusetts Society, a reception by Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss for members of the council at Dumbarton Oaks, her home, and a reception in honor of Mrs. Hutchinson and the national officers in the evening.

A flower on her dress and her long handkerchief matched her hat. Mr. d'Aulby received with her.

A low bowl of roses and forget-me-nots decorated the center of the table in the dining room, and on the buffet there was a large bouquet of rose-colored snapdragons. Among those who poured was Senora de Castillo Najera, wife of the Mexican Ambassador, who was accompanied by her daughter Senorita Erma Castillo Najera, her niece, Senorita Lupe Davila, and Senor Dr. Don Manuel Gonzales, of the embassy. Others pouring included Mrs. Joseph Cecil, Mme. Pastoriza, wife of the Dominican Minister; Mme. Recinos, wife of the Minister of Guatemala; Mrs. Harry B. She and the Ambassador and their son, Oleg, who is graduating from high school in June, expect to spend the summer in Russia.

Mrs. William Wheatley was accompanied by Mme. Laurent, who has just returned to Washington after spending several years abroad. She wore a gray silk boucle suit with a small light blue hat on her fair hair and a flaring shoulder-length veil.

Mrs. Robertson Absent.

Mrs. David Allan Robertson, wife of the president of Goucher College, in Baltimore, will not be at home this afternoon as is her custom the first Wednesday of the month, because of absence from the city.

Bar President, Mrs. Stinchfield and Executive Board Guests of Honor at Tea Given by Mr. and Mrs. McCracken Party at Home in Georgetown Is in Nature of House-Warming; Tables Are Set Both in Garden and in Drawing Room.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Mr. and Mrs. William P. McCracken were hosts yesterday afternoon at a tea in honor of the executive board and the president of the American Bar Association and Mrs. Harold Stinchfield, of Minnesota. The party, given at their home in Georgetown, which they have occupied since last October, was something in the nature of a house-warming as it was the first large affair at which they have entertained since moving there.

The host and hostess, with the guests of honor, received inside, but the fair weather and charm of the garden back of the house, soon turned the function into an outdoor party. Tea was served in the dining room, where lavender lilacs and silver candelabra decorated the table. In the drawing room pink larkspur, pink tulips and white lilies were arranged and, in the library and on the front porch, with its green chairs and white pillows, were large bouquets of white snapdragons.

In the garden, tulips and lilacs were in bloom in profusion and two tables were set with refreshments. The one was in the shade of the fruit trees at the west end, and the other, under a great spreading oak nearly 200 years old.

The hostess wore a white lingerie coat frock over black, and Mrs. Stinchfield a gray ensemble with a dubonnet hat.

Among the guests were the Attorney General, Mr. Homer S. Cummings; the secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin, Senator and Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, Mrs. Vandenberg among those who assisted in pouring; Mrs. Morris Sheppard, who also poured, and was accompanied by Senator Sheppard; Mrs. William E. Borah, wearing a navy a blue suit trimmed in mustard-color; Mrs. J. Hamilton Lewis, Senator and Mrs. Wallace White, Mrs. David Reed, Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, Lady Lewis, Mrs. Louis G. Caldwell, another who assisted the hostess; Mr. Caldwell and Miss Joan Murphy and Mrs. John Ash, who also poured.

Mr. and Mrs. Linton Wells, who have just returned from Ethiopia and are in Washington a few days, were the center of an interested group throughout the afternoon.

Others among the many guests were Mr. Julius Smith, president of the North Carolina Bar Association; Mrs. Max Gardner, Mrs. David Brown, Mr. and Mrs. James Wright, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Henning, Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse, Commander and Mrs. W. D. Thomas and Mrs. James F. Curtis.

Mrs. Albert Dewey looked particularly well in a dark suit with acorn-color hat and blouse; Mr. and Mrs. George Pulver were there as were Mr. and Mrs. Maury Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wickser and Mr. and Mrs. Morrison Shafroth. Mr. William L. Ransom, former president of the American Bar Association was present from New York, accompanied by Mrs. Ransom and Mr. and Mrs. George Bond—Mr. Bond, the president of the New York Bar Association.

Also in the company were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hogan, Mrs. Thad Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Quinn, Mr. John Q. Tillson and Senator Greene, of Rhode Island.

Miss Audrey Campbell has left Washington for England, where she will attend the coronation. She was accompanied by Miss Gertrude Webb, who makes her home with Miss Campbell in a house on Kalorama road formerly occupied by former Senator and Mrs. Warren J. Barbour, of New Jersey. Miss Campbell is a niece of Mrs. Joseph Leiter of this city.

Group Captain T. E. B. Howe, air attache of the British Embassy, sailed yesterday on the Queen Mary for London, where he, too, will attend the coronation ceremonies.

Yugoslavian Envoy, Mme. Fotitch Luncheon Guests of Mme. Franges

The Minister of Yugoslavia and Mme. Fotitch were guests of honor at a luncheon given yesterday by Mme. Ivan Franges, wife of the former Secretary of the Legation, at the home of her mother, Mrs. William Corby, in Chevy Chase.

Mme. Franges will leave tomorrow with her mother and sister, Miss Eleanor Corby, to join her husband in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, where he is now stationed. Sailing with them will be Mme. Popovici, whose husband, former Secretary of the Rumanian Legation, was transferred last winter to the Foreign Office at Bucharest.

Last evening the Naval Attache of the Germany Embassy, Rear Admiral Witthoeft-Emden, entertained at a farewell party for Mme. Franges and Miss Corby.

German Diplomatic Aide, Wife Honor Herr and Frau Struve

The First Secretary of the German Embassy and Frau Scholz last night entertained at a supper party for 20 guests in compliment to the retiring Second Secretary and Frau Struve. Lilacs were used to decorate all the rooms and as center bouquets on the small tables at which the guests were served.

Frau Scholz's sister, Fraulein von Schnitzler, who also was to have been a guest of honor at the supper, was delayed in her arrival from Chicago where she has been for several days, and will not reach Washington until tomorrow.

Kathryn Wilkinson Wed to Minister

Miss Kathryn Anne Wilkinson, of Washington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Wilkinson, of Canyon, Tex., and the Rev. Robert Cook Simmons, of Richmond Hill, Long Island, son of Mr. and Mrs. Winn T. Simmons, of Takoma Park, were married yesterday afternoon at the Takoma Park Presbyterian Church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. Paul Schearer, pastor.

Mr. George H. Moore, of Washington, gave the bride in marriage. She was attended by Mrs. John W. Coffman, jr., of Takoma Park, Md. Mr. Coffman was the best man. Ushers were William H. Parsons, Robert E. Parsons, of Takoma Park; Wallace E. Perry and Charles H. Hall, of Washington.

Dr. Ernest Meyer Is Bringing Bride Back to Embassy

News which surprised even officials at the German Embassy when they learned it yesterday, is that Dr. Ernst Wilhelm Meyer, First Secretary, will bring back a bride, when he returns from his trip to Mexico May 15. His many friends in Washington had no idea when he left for the south that he intended to be married, and even now they are wondering who the bride is. The guess is, however, that his wife is German, as rules are very strict regarding members of the diplomatic set marrying any but their own countrywomen.

Ever since he came to Washington five years ago, Dr. Meyer has been among the most popular "extra men" in the Diplomatic Corps, and many thought he was a confirmed bachelor, until letters came announcing his marriage.

The Vice President and Mrs. John Nance Garner head the list of Washingtonians planning to attend the Kentucky Derby on Saturday. They will be with Senator Joseph F. Guffey, of Pennsylvania, who is taking a large group with him.

The Postmaster General and Mrs. James A. Farley and Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Roberts have arranged their usual party which will go in three special cars, leaving here Friday night and returning Sunday morning. In the group will be former Gov. and Mrs. Max Gardner of North Carolina, Mr. Herbert Bayard Swope, Mr. Vincent Bendix, Mr. Sol Rosenblatt, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Cutler, Mr. Morton L. Schwartz, Mr. Fred Hume and Mr. R. W. Haynes, of New York City; Mr. and Mrs. Elliott White Springs, of Lancatser, S. C.; Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Woodruff, of Wilmington, Del.; Mr. and Mrs. John D. Kennedy, of New York; Mr. Stewart McDonald, Federal housing administrator; Mr. and Mrs. Martin Cannon and probably Mr. Amon Carter, of Fort Worth, Tex. The James Roosevelts, who had originally planned to join the party, will not be able to go.

The group will leave the Capital at 6 o'clock Friday evening, arriving in Louisville at 9:15 Saturday morning and will go by special bus, with a police escort, to the Jockey Club for luncheon. They will leave on their return to Washington at 9 o'clock Saturday night.

Among others from here who plan to go are Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hopkins, Col. F. C. Harrington, Senator George Radcliffe, of Maryland; Mr. Juan Tomadelli and Miss Cleo Tomadelli, Commissioner and Mrs. George Allen, Mr. Loring Black, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Roper, son and daughter-in-law of the Secretary of Commerce, and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, and the Secretary of the Portuguese Legation, Mr. Jao de Deus Ramos.

The First Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. W. W. Howes, with Mr. L. Stanley Kahn, of New York, a frequent visitor here at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Kremer, will leave by plane with several others early Saturday morning and return here in time for dinner that night.

Mr. and Mrs. Kremer are remaining at home and, as is their custom, entertaining friends at a radio race party, enjoying the excitement without the bustling crowd.

Cleveland Fans Still Same Old Bunch

By Shirley Povich.

Cleveland, Ohio.

The folks out here haven't changed much. They're still whooping that the Indians will win the pennant. It's a seasonal shout with Cleveland fans. They read all winter that the Indians are an improved ball club and they yelp all spring that the Indians are the class of the league.

POVICH.

Come summer, they don't want the pennant—that's impossible—they want the manager's scalp.

That has been the routine for the past dozen years. Cleveland clubs, on paper, did, indeed, measure up nicely. They had hitting, they had an acceptable defense, and apaprently they had th best pitching staff in the league. T only thing they lacked was the ab ity to win sufficient ball games.

* * * *

That particular deficiency was ascribed variously to bum management, dissension on the club and tough luck. The athletes were never blamed. Roger Peckinpaugh and Walter Johnson finally got the sack when Cleveland fans all but boycotted the park here and by popular demand Steve O'Neill was installed as manager.

* * * *

O'Neill's team finished fifth last year, but the pennant fever has nevertheless stricken Cleveland fans again this spring. Blithely discounting the fact that the same Yankees of 1937 won the pennant by 19½ games last year and that Detroit is a vastly improved team, Cleveland folk are anticipating the flag with that peculiar reasoning peculiar to Cleveland fans.

* * * *

This year they are gayly hitching their hopes to young Bob Feller, the strikeout king of 1936, who, you would think from the feeling here, is going to pitch every day in the week and make a farce of the pennant race with the championship safely in Cleveland by July 1.

* * * *

They're quite gone overboard for young Feller since the Indians' barnstorming trip with the New York Giants. There was, of course, plenty to enthuse about as the kid speedballer bowled over the Giants with regularity and gave up a hit only ever so often. He was, indeed, a sensation in that series, but Cleveland fans at this writing are just a bit too excited by it all to stand off and take a calm look at the possibilities.

* * * *

The fact is that when Feller was beating the Giants he wasn't beating much of a hitting ball club. The Giants are notoriously weak at bat and at least a half dozen American League clubs will be able to offer more resistance up there at the plate than did the National League champions.

* * * *

There are clubs like the Yankees and Tigers, and Washington, too, that simply dote on fast ball pitching and whether or not Feller will be able to throw his smoke ball past those batting orders is still very much in doubt. The American, be it known, is a fast ball league in contrast to the National, where curve ball pitching is the vogue.

* * * *

And Cleveland fans are forgetting, perhaps, too, that Feller can pitch only every fourth day—not every day in the week. It's a bit too early to acclaim him as a winning pitcher. The top thing that can be said about him is that he's a swell prospect. Cleveland folks are confusing that word prospect with star.

Louie Norman Newson is one gent who holds little respect for the Cleveland team. He said so today in the lobby of the Nats' hotel, where the team was idling during an off day in the schedule.

* * * *

"There ain't but three teams that can win the pennant," said Newson, "and they're New York, Detroit and Washington. It looks to me like a toss up between them three."

* * * *

Did Newson, per chance, notice that Washington was a dismal last at the bottom of the league this morning?

"So, what of it? We're four games behind the leader. We can wipe out those four games in a week. We're as good a ball club as the Yankees or Tigers, 'cept we got a bad start. When we start clicking, we're a better ball club. They can't count us out of it."

* * * *

And why doesn't Mr. Newson like the Cleveland club?

"They? Why, they're just a bad ball club," said Bashful Buck with a sweeping generality. "They always fold."

Then why was it that Mr. Newson himself had rarely been able to beat Cleveland when he was pitching against 'em?

* * * *

"That's the funny part of it. They're my jinx club. A lotta bums in this league can beat 'em, but somehow I don't have any luck against 'em. Always seem to have a bad day when I'm pitching against Cleveland. And when I'm having a bad day, boy, even Cleveland can beat me."

Hughes, Tribe Player, Ill.

Cleveland, May 4 (AP).—Roy Hughes, third baseman for the Cleveland Indians, was sent to a hospital today, suffering from what Dr. Edward B. Castle described as "food poisoning." John Kroner will take his place in the line-up.

His Triple Steal Starts Rout; DeShong, Simmons Also Star

Outfielder Had Earlier Robbed Weatherly of Winning Homer.

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, May 4.—With the Cleveland Indians suffering from shock and reeling under a rain of Washington base hits, the amazing Nats fired a ruinous seven-run broadside in the eleventh inning this afternoon and made away with an uproarious 12-5 ball game.

The shock was provided by Ben Chapman who burst a 5-5 tie wide open in that eleventh by leading a triple steal which landed Chapman at home plate a split second ahead of the pitch of the dazed Whitlow Wyatt and put the Nats ahead, 6-5.

Chapman had led off that eleventh inning by walking and Buddy Lewis pushed him to second with his third hit of the afternoon. Joe Kuhel sacrificed both runners along but the backbone appeared gone from the uprising when Johnny Stone watched one of Carl Fischer's pitches sail by for a third strike. Manager Steve O'Neil then summoned the right-handed Wyatt to face Simmons and when Simmons drew a walk, the bases were filled.

Wyatt, who served time with the Tigers and White Sox before joining up with the Indians, was unperturbed as Chapman feinted a half dozen steals of home with Mihalic at bat. But on that last dash, Chapman wasn't kidding. He moved right along down the base line and was practically home before the amazed Wyatt let the ball go to Catcher Pytlak. Lewis and Simmons also moved up on Chapman's coup.

Superhero Stuff.

That, apparently, unsettled Wyatt, and the rain, which was now a steady drizzle, was accompanied by a shower of Washington base hits that reached 20 before the fifth Cleveland pitcher of the afternoon could get the Washingtons out.

Johnny Mihalic, an old Cleveland boy, recommenced the scoring in that eleventh with a single to center that scored Lewis and Simmons, and four more solid smashes followed as 5,000 Cleveland fans moaned. Bluege whacked a single to left, John Riddle also singled to left, Jimmy DeShong personally singled to right and the pestiferous Chapman, up for the second time in the inning, ushered the Nats' sixth and seventh runs of the session across the plate with a swell double to center.

This Chapman was a superhet-

erodyne hero today. The Indians would have won the ball game, 6 to 5, in regulation innings save for the Washington centerfielder, who kept the Nats in the game in the eighth with an indescribably beautiful catch off the bat of Roy Weatherly.

The score was tied, 5-5, at the time and Weatherly, first up for the Indians, cow-tailed a ball into deep centerfield 400 feet distant. Chapman was off, with the crack of the bat, of course, and risking a fractured skull as he sidled along the concrete wall, he went into a butterfly flutter, stuck out his gloved paw and, with his back to home plate, made a catch that robbed Weatherly of a home run.

Even Cleveland fans, than whom there are none more home-townish, cheered the play of the Nats' centerfielder. It was, indeed, a beaut.

But long before this, mention should have been made of a couple of other guys who were tremendous assets to the Nats today—Jimmy DeShong and Al Simmons. Almost to the same extent as Chapman, Simmons and DeShong contributed to the grief of the Indians who were basking in a 4-0 lead at the end of the second inning.

The veteran Simmons emerged from his lethargic batting slump in the seventh inning with a bang—a two-base bang far against the right centerfield wall at a time when the Nats sorely needed a hit of that kind. They were trailing, 5-4, and Simmons wallop gave 'em a 5-5 tie.

DeShong Also Heroes.

Sweet was the triumph of DeShong, who heretofore had been attempting only vainly to win a game for the Nats. Taking up the pitching burden in the fourth inning after the Indians had pummeled Buck Newsom for seven hits and a 5-2 lead, DeShong was no less than swell.

For that stretch of eight innings—from the fourth to the finish, the blond-haired righthander held the Indians scoreless. Only four hits did he allow, never more than one to an inning, and in the seventh, when it appeared he was a beaten pitcher, he stuck in there nicely.

That was when big Hal Trosky tripled over Simmons' head into

New $300,000 Yacht To Race for $50 Mug

Harold S. Vanderbilt Builds New Yacht to Contend for America's Cup; Sopwith Already on Way Across Atlantic With Two Speedy Vessels.

The following approximate figures furnish a comparison of the 1937 contenders:

Yacht	Tonnage	Length Overall	Length Waterline	Beam	Draft	Sail Area (Sq. Ft.)
RANGER	166.5	135	87	21.5	15	7,550
RAINBOW	138.14	126.57	82	20.92	14.93	7,555
YANKEE	164	126	86.3	22.5	15	7,521
ENDEAVOUR II	164	132	87	22.5	15	7,560

By the Associated Press.

Boston, May 4.—Veiled by more secrecy than is accorded naval vessels under construction nearby, the Bath (Me.) iron works are rushing to completion the sloop Ranger with which Harold S. Vanderbilt hopes to defend for the third time the famed "battered old mug."

Ranger will be the largest Class-J sloop ever built—considerably larger than the two American rivals, Yankee and Rainbow, which she must eliminate to gain the America's Cup defense nomination.

But Ranger will be only slightly bigger than T. O. M. Sopwith's British challenger, Endeavour II.

Ranger will be 135 feet long, 3 feet longer than Endeavour II, 9 feet longer than Gerard B. Lambert's Yankee and more than 8 feet longer than Chandler Hovey's Rainbow.

Announcing Ranger's general dimensions, Codesigners W. Starling Burgess, jr., were cautiously silent regarding improvements and innovations. Burgess designed Rainbow, the sloop with which Vanderbilt defeated Sopwith's first Endeavour in 1934. Seventeen millionaires financed Rainbow then. Now the inventor of the Vanderbilt convention in bridge is playing a lone hand.

Burgess also designed Enterprise, with which Vanderbilt turned back the last of the Lipton Shamrocks in 1930.

Racing for the America's Cup dates back to 1851, when the schooner of that name lifted it by leading British yachts around the Isle of Wight. Queen Victoria inquired of a British tar which yacht finished second. After scanning the empty waters in the America's wake through a telescope, the sailor replied:

"Your Majesty, there is no second."

Since then there have been 15 unsuccessful invasions of American waters in quest of the trophy. The late Sir Thomas Lipton, who led five of them with his famous Shamrocks, liked to refer to the cup as "that battered old mug."

Wars have been waged on fewer millions than have been spent in defense and challenge of the symbolically bottomless trophy which originally cost less than $50. Reports have it Ranger is costing Vanderbilt approximately $300,000, and he is economizing by using much gear and equipment he removed from Rainbow before selling her.

Claude Rippy, Edward Bean Pace Woodmont Qualifying With 73's

Pitt Slumps to 79, Faces Elimination

Fitzgerald Next With 74; Women's Golf Teams Play; Seay Advances at East Potomac; Western, Central Win Easily.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Eddie Bean and Claude Rippy tied for the first day's medal honors in the twelfth renewal of the Woodmont Invitation yesterday with 4 over par 73's, as the rugged Bethesda layout denied a par round to some 60 participants.

Rippy, finalist in the National public links tourney last year, carelessly jabbed a 15-inch putt on the home green that missed the cup and cost him a one-stroke lead over the field. The par 3 holes also cost the "Ripper" three strokes. Bean, Beaver Dam luminary, was 3 over perfect figures on the first nine, but parred eight out of nine on his second trip, overshooting the seventh green for his only bogey.

Maury Fitzgerald, Kenwood, hit a bad streak on the back nine that sent him 4 over par on three successive holes and cost him a chance at the medalist honors. He shot a pair of 37s for a 74. Andy Oliveri was next with a 75.

Levi Yoder, with a pair of 38s, apparently made the championship bracket while Robert Effler, Georgetown freshman, from Toledo, Ohio, matched Yoder's score of 76. Martin McCarthy and Max Taylor scored 77 and 78, respectively, while J. M. Palmer, of Beaver Dam, shot a 77, but withdrew from the match play rounds. Leo Cullinane, Kenwood, also scored a 77.

Harry Pitt, favorite on his pretourney showing, slumped to 79 and faced almost certain elimination from the first 16. Pitt returned in 38 after an outgoing 41, but with 11 scores under 80, Pitt's chances of qualifying are dim.

Lou Harrison, Argyle, was out in 37, including 8 straight 4s. He birdied the tenth hole to gain a stroke on par, but took a disastrous 7 on the next and a like score on the fifteenth hole that put him out of the championship bracket.

John Shorey, John Brawner, Volney Burnett, Ralph Quinter, Louis Fuchs and others will attempt to better the co-medalist's 73s in the final qualifying round today.

Rally in 11th Downs Tribe For Nats, 12-5

Chapman Trigger Man for Seven-Run Burst That Wins Wild Tilt.

left center with one out and the score tied at 5-5. But DeShong worked upon Solters until he disposed of that slugger on a grounder to Buddy Lewis and then extricated himself from danger with a flourish by striking out the dangerous O'Dell Hale.

Big Newsom, fresh from his five-hit triumph over the Yankees, was off to a sour start against his perennial jinxes, the Indians. He gave up four hits and three runs in the opening inning when Solters' single into left drove two colleagues across the plate and he gave up another in the second when Lary doubled to right center and Averill singled to left with two out.

The Nats got two runs back against Mel Harder in the third when Chapman walked, Lewis was safe on Hale's muff and Kuhel and Stone followed with singles, but the Indians boosted it to 5-3 in the third when Hale doubled and Pytlak shot a single through the box.

Buddy Lewis launched a two-run uprising against Harder in the fifth with a clever bunt to Kroner, and Kuhel and Stone followed with singles. Kuhel scored the second run of the inning when he beat Kroner's throw to the plate on Simmons' grounder, but the rally was cut short when Stone was out attempting to score from second on Mihalic's single to right. Weatherly's throw beat him to the plate by a dozen feet and Bluege climaxed the rally by hitting into a double play.

The Nats made four hits in the seventh, but they were content to score only one run and tie it at 5-5. Lewis beat out a hit to Hale and Kuhel singled to right, but Stone lined into a double play and the Nats' cause slumped. But Al Simmons breathed new life into it with a well-spanked double off the right centerfield wall that scored Lewis with the tying run and knocked Harder out of the box, John Hevirg replacing him.

All of this time, DeShong was doing nobly out there. But he ran into trouble in the eighth when he walked Salters, who advanced to second on Kroner's sacrifice, but Pytlak popped meekly to Stone and Lary grounded into a force play started by Mihalic.

Thus the game wore into the eleventh and the Indians had to use three pitchers to get the Nats out.

Blond John Riddle, the Nats' 30-year-old rookie catcher, contributed nothing today to disturb the belief that he will be a tremendous asset to the Washington Club.

Performing in his first game for the Nats, Riddle hit the ball solidly on four of his five appearances at the plate, smashed two vicious singles into left field and twice was out on liners to the outfield.

Only one Indian attempted to steal on Riddle. That was Earl Averill, who dashed to second base in the fourth inning only to find Riddle's perfect throw to Johnny Mihalic awaiting him there.

Weaver to Face Indians Today

Monte Weaver, effective against Cleveland when he was a winning pitcher in 1931-32, will go to the mound against the Indians tomorrow when the Nats resume their series here.

Buck Newsom's failure to last more than three innings against the Indians today was thoroughly in line with precedent. Newsom, in 12 previous starts against the Indians in his big league career, had been unable to win more than two games.

Buddy Myer, absent from the Nats' lineup today because of a recurrence of a stiff neck, may not play tomorrow. With Johnny Mihalic ably substituting at second base, Manager Bucky Harris is awaiting Myer's complete recovery.

9 Errors Help Tech Trounce Riders, 11 to 3

Mates Give Doonis Good Support, Get 11 Hits to Take Rout.

By John R. Vosburgh

With little regard for the feelings of their hosts, Tech High's ball players showed up Roosevelt ruthlessly yesterday, merrily romping to an 11-3 victory in Roosevelt Stadium.

The Rough Riders were very generous, helping Tech along with nine errors, a couple of passed balls, a wild pitch and various other means.

Tech, on the other hand, was giving errorless support to Tommy Doonis' pitching and collecting 11 hits off Sammy Mallos and Bill Hudson, who were throwing the ball plateward for Roosevelt. The victory put the Techmen in a tie with Wilson for third place in the series with two wins in three starts.

Cards Are Favored In Meet Today

A preview of Saturday's Mason-Dixon Conference track championships at Baltimore will be staged at Brookland this afternoon when Catholic University, American University and Randolph-Macon vie in a triangular meet. All are scheduled to compete in the conference games.

Catholic is favored today, having outscored American in a triangular meet with Gallaudet several weeks ago, and figuring to be stronger than the Virginians on paper. Both the Cardinals and Randolph-Macon will be at full strength for the contest, but American is handicapped by the loss of Hill, who is on the ailing list and will compete no more this season.

Gomez Gives 4 Hits, Yanks Win, 10 to 1

Tigers Snowed Under a 14-Hit Barrage in Series Opener.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, May 4.—The world champion Yankees got off to an auspicious start on their first Western trip today. Lefty Gomez, their stylish lefthander, held the Detroit Tigers to four hits as the New Yorkers won, 10-1, and went into a first-place tie with Mickey Cochrane's crew.

The Yanks clinched the game in the first three innings. They scored seven runs at the expense of Jake Wade, the Tigers' in-and-out southpaw, and, although Rookie George Gill pitched with fair effectiveness the rest of the way, the damage already had been done.

The champions' Italian strong-arm squad—Joe DiMaggio, Frank Crosetti and Tony Lazzeri—were the leaders in the victory. Between them they gathered half of the 14 hits and drove in six runs. DiMaggio's bat provided the impetus for four.

Crosetti hit a home run in the ninth, besides two singles. Lazzeri had two doubles and DiMaggio a triple and a single. Gerald Walker, whose double extended his hitting streak to ten games, drove in Billy Rogell for the Tigers' lone run on a long fly in the eighth.

Gomez struck out nine, four in the first two innings.

Tedema Is Easy Winner in Feature Race at Pimlico

$43.50 Paid By Balcony In 1st Race

Departed Takes the 7th Event, Pays $7.20 as 7,500 Watch.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent

Baltimore, May 4.—Darting out of the starting gate like a jack-in-the-box, W. H. Lipscomb's Tedema won the John S. Skinner purse, today's feature race, in runaway fashion. With Jockey Bobby Merritt doing little more than guiding, the daughter of Teddy was in front from flag fall to finish and was not even challenged. She was in hand while leading Bunny Baby, E. K. Bryson colorbearer, to the wire by three lengths. The latter was judged second after the camera had been consulted, but Briar Plume lost the place money by at least half a length.

Tedema, third in the Aberdeen Stakes, missed being the favorite by 10 cents and paid her backers a $7.80 mutuel while running the four and a half furlongs in 0:54 1-5, the fastest time of the meeting for the route.

Ideal racing weather prevailed and a crowd of 7,500 saw the group of seven juvenile fillies perform. The frisky gals were at the post for 7 minutes. At one stage or another of the "get ready" period, each member of the field was unruly. Tedema was one of the worst offenders and lined up only after a twitch had been placed in her nose. She was walking into the stall when the starting bell came and Jockey Merritt made the most of the opportunity.

Tedema flashed out in front and the race was over, except for pay-off purposes.

Balcony Pays $43.50.

Mrs. H. Good's Balcony surprised by taking the first race at a $43.50 mutuel. The Balko filly, which seldom visits the winner's circle, took a photo verdict from H. Kerr's Cancel, with Titian Kiddie, the favorite, third in the field of 11. Balcony and Cancel fought it out from the start of the 6-furlong test. First one and then the other was in front, with Balcony being in command at the all-important finish. The winner was timed in 1:13 2-5 over the fast track.

Gary Black's Little Marty, trained by J. P. Jones and ridden by his son, Bill Jones, turned in an easy victory in the steeplechase. This was the second win of the meeting for the aged son of Lucky Hour. A length behind the winner came Thomas Hitchcock's Axework, with Snake Charmer third and 15 lengths away. Little Marty was $4.80 favorite and ran the 2¼-mile, 14-jump course in 4:26.

Black Boo, Broadstep Win.

Black Boo, one that has been racing over his head, dropped down in his own class today and won the third race, a maiden affair, named the Delinquent. The colt, owned by A. Moore and ridden by A. Cubitt, was in much trouble, but finally worked clear and defeated Happy Hazel by a length and a half. Third money went to Torquil. Black Boo returned an $18.50 mutuel and with Balcony, winner of the first race, produced a $298.60 daily double. Black Boo ran the mile and 70 yards in 1:45 2-5.

The Mohr entry of Broadstep and Baby Witt accounted for first and third money in the fifth race, a 6-furlong sprint. Miss Tiptoe, a long shot, split the stablemates. Broadstep was the leader soon after the start and had to be hard ridden through the stretch to hold Miss Tiptoe safe. The entry paid a $15.90 mutuel and turned in time of 1:14 1-5. Apprentice Jockey A. Shelhamer rode the winner.

Departed made it two straight for the get of the sire Teddy by following the lead of Tedema and taking the seventh race, an event at a mile and a furlong which drew eight claiming routers. The colt, owned by Mrs. B. F. Christmas and piloted by Apprentice Bobby Morris, defeated Prettylass by two and one-half lengths with Fluffy Lee third. The winner paid $7.20 and was timed in 1:55 2-5.

TITIAN KIDDIE was closest to the pacemakers from the beginning, but failed to threaten. HAPPY HOSTESS, shuffled back at the break, went evenly thereafter. DIPLOMACY had some early speed. The others were not factors.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BLACK BOO, $18.60, $8.70, $5.60; HAPPY HAZEL, $6.10, $4.10; TORQUIL, $5.40.

BLACK BOO, taken to the inside when blocked going to the first turn, did not have racing room until the turn for home, wore down HAPPY HAZEL to win going away. HAPPY HAZEL, forwardly placed throughout, came to the inside to take command with a rush entering the stretch and continued gamely, but could not resist the winner. TORQUIL, moved up after a half, was in tight quarters entering the stretch and closed full of run. ABADDON lacked early speed and closed a gap in the final quarter. SUN SCOUT saved ground while pressing the pace of BAREBACK and tired. BAREBACK stopped after setting a brisk pace.

DAILY DOUBLE, BALCONY AND BLACK BOO, PAID $298.60.

FOURTH RACE—Four and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stalls. Won handily; place driving. Went to post at 3:52. Off at 3:56. Winner, Manhasset Stable's b. or br. c. (2), by Transmute—The Cherokee II. Trained by W. J. Norton. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 3-5, 0:48 2-5, 0:54 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SMOKE SIGNAL, $3.30, $2.40, $2.10; CREDENCE, $3.90, $2.40; SPRING MEADOW, $2.40.

SMOKE SIGNAL rushed up on the outside of SPRING MEADOW to go to the front with good speed, drew clear and was being taken in hand through the final sixteenth. CREDENCE closed with a rush from a sluggish beginning. SPRING MEADOW raced very greenly and swerved in at the eighth pole. TAPSTICK saved ground and was pulled up sharply when blocked by SPRING MEADOW in the stretch. TWO ACES was outrun.

BROADSTEP, off alertly, drew clear of BROMIDE going to the first turn, was kept to a hard drive through the stretch, but was tiring at the end. MISS TIPTOE, prominent from the start, rallied, was placed to punishment and was wearing down the winner. BABY WITT, shuffled back at the break, came wide for racing room and closed stoutly. DILWIN was rushed into contention at once, went forwardly and came willingly at the end. TROSTAR saved ground entering the stretch, but tired. WISE MONEY showed a good effort.

SIXTH RACE—Four and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stalls. Won handily; place driving. Went to post at 4:58. Off at 5:05. Winner, W. H. Lipscomb's b. f. TEDEMA, in motion at the start, drew out to a good lead at once and was not challenged, winning in hand. BUNNY BABY was hard ridden throughout and closed willingly. BRIAR PLUME came through on the rail entering the stretch and closed full of run. ROYAL RHAPSODY had no excuses. SINGING SLAVE dropped back gradually. FANCY THAT was not a factor.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stalls. Won easily; place same. Went to post at 5:31. Off at 5:33. Winner, Mrs. B. F. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DEPARTED, $7.20, $4.40, $2.80; PRETTY LASS, $7.90, $4.40; FLUFFY LEE, $3.90.

DEPARTED, steadied along while running in close quarters along the backstretch, took command when clear approaching the stretch turn, and easily held away to the end. PRETTY LASS, close up from the start, closed gamely, but could not cope with the winner. FLUFFY LEE had much taken out of her running with BLACK MISCHIEF and tired. BLACK MISCHIEF was hustled along throughout the running and faltered. MONROE went lame in the running and was pulled up.

War Admiral Derby Stock Is Boosted

Riddle Entry Does Fine Workout on Muddy Track in Rain.

By the Associated Press.

Louisville, Ky., May 4.—Typical Derby weather descended on Churchill Downs today as Samuel Riddle's War Admiral strengthened his position as the favorite for Saturday's renewal of the 3-year-old turf classic with a fine workout over the full route of a mile and a quarter.

With rain pelting down and the track already slow from last night's downpour, the son of Man O' War stepped the distance in the excellent time of 2:08 3-5, after going the six furlongs in 1:15 4-5 and passing the mile post in 1:42 3-5. The workout was considered even more brilliant in view of the fact that the Riddle ace is not considered a muddler and that he worked alone.

"He's not much of a muddler," said Trainer George Conway, after the colt pulled up. "But I was more than satisfied the way he negotiated the slow going. He's going to be a mighty tough horse to beat Saturday, especially if the track is fast."

Fairy Hill Nearly Ties Time.

Meanwhile, R. E. Handlen, trainer of William duPont, jr's., Fairy Hill scratched the Santa Anita Derby winner from the Derby "trial" and then sent his charge the Derby distance in 2:08 4-5, after beating War Admiral's time for six furlongs by more than a second.

While the other leading contenders, with the exception of those entered in the "trial" were held to gallops, the Wheatley Stable's Melodist appeared on the scene to challenge for the $50,000 purse. The Wood Memorial winner, trained by "Sunny Jim" Fitzsimmons, arrived from New York in fine fettle. He was in charge of Tommy Driscoll, stable foreman pending the arrival of Fitzsimmons Friday.

"Look out, here comes the Derby winner," said Driscoll as he led the long legged gray son of Royal Minstrel from the car. "His victory in the Wood was no fluke. You just watch him run when they hit that stretch Saturday."

The sun came out at intervals and dried up the track slightly for the 1937 debut of Mrs. Ethel V. Mars' highly regarded Reaping Reward in the "trial," but the early arrivals continued to talk of War Admiral's fine showing and the prospect of the veteran Fitzsimmons saddling his third Derby winner since 1930.

Wheat Tumbles 3 Cents Facing Large Receipts

Early Advance Followed by Heavy Selling on Stop-Loss Orders.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 4.—Tumbled headlong downward by a rush of selling orders, wheat prices late today fell almost 3 cents a bushel, much more than offsetting earlier gains.

A great deal of the late selling of wheat was of a stop-loss character, and was the result of proposed large deliveries tomorrow on May contracts here, together with likelihood of further notable deliveries following.

The close for wheat was at the day's bottom quotations, ⅛ to 2 cents under yesterday's finish; May, $1.28½ to $1.28⅝; July, $1.17⅞ to $1.18; September, $1.16 to $1.16⅛. Corn, ⅛ to 1½ up; May, $1.31; July, $1.18¼ to $1.18¾. Oats unchanged to ¼ lower; May, 49⅝, and rye, ⅜ to 1½ off; May, $1.11. Provisions results varied from 5 cents setback to a gain of 2 cents.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, May 4.—Stock prices continued to exhibit a firm tone today and a good demand developed for all groups of securities. Industrials moved higher, especially tobacco, steel and rubber issues and gilt-edged shares and home rails were also firm. There was good buying in the oil section and mining issues also continued their upward movement. German bonds moved irregularly.

Paris—French rentes were generally lower, closing 5 centimes higher to 45 lower. Royal Dutch finished with a net gain of 60 francs and Bank of France moved 50 francs higher. Suez Canal lost 50 francs and the closing tone was mixed.

Liverpool—Wheat futures rallied in late trading and closed 1d to 1¼d net higher after early weakness. Inquiry for Manitoba wheat was better and May contract deliveries were small. Cotton futures finished 3 to 4 points higher, the market being influenced by the firmer London Stock Market, but speculative interest was small. Local traders were the chief purchasers.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Advance in Greater Activity, Led by Steel and Telephone; Bonds Firm.

New York, May 4.—Reflecting the feeling of relief both here and in London over the passing of another minor crisis in public management of markets the tone strengthened in speculative and investment markets. Bonds held steady and price increases in stocks stretched from 1 to 3 points in the active issues. Stock turnover rose but failed to reach 1,000,000 shares. July wheat closed ⅝ of a cent lower at 118 cents a bushel.

So much is being said nowadays by high Government officials in the nature of warnings against a coming depression that the psychological effect is bound to be bad. If people read the newspapers they cannot escape the conclusion that many in the Administration, from President Roosevelt down, not only fear an early depression, but seem to take it for granted. What they seem to be attempting in their structures against speculation, rising commodity prices, monopoly and the like is to reduce the violence of the setback when it comes.

Another Warning.

All that scarcely fits in well with what self-appointed spokesmen for the New Deal economic management have been telling the country. Their gospel was that, given a fairly free hand, business could be so regulated as to insure prosperity without recurrent depressions. The hand has been free enough, most people will agree, but it has not kept us out of a season of heavy warnings against calamity at a time when business is not yet out of a depressed area.

The latest contribution to the new idea of depression warning comes from Leo T. Crowley, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the chap who will have to do a bit of magic with Government bonds and currency if ever a wholesale run on the banks should develop. Mr. Crowley, in a speech delivered today to a convention of South Carolina bankers, warned that "Values . . . can fall again, and I believe that a major part of the present windfall (of bank earnings) should be reserved as corporate savings against just such a contingency."

That is sound advice and bankers will do well to heed it, as indeed they are showing every sign of doing, but it raises a puzzling set of questions. If banks should conserve undistributed profits now instead of paying them out in dividends, why is not that equally good medicine for other business? Why is it not indeed far more applicable to industry, since the bank needs its undivided profits less as a protection to depositors than as an insurance to bank stockholders, who usually are a well heeled class anyhow?

Tax Stimulant.

The suspicion arises that, in giving the country the penalty tax on undistributed corporation earnings (to the provisions of which banks are immune) the Government either was highly confident that we never, never would have another business depression, or it was surprisingly indifferent to the fate of business and to its own tax collections in case another setback did come. The Administration has made it clear that whatever may have been its confidence in permanent prosperity a year or so ago, it now has its doubts, and they aren't wee ones either.

The penalty tax was obviously a means of stimulating price advances —stocks, commodities and everything else—and of giving business the appearance of high prosperity, through the distribution of huge sums of money which ordinarily would have been kept in productive enterprise. The Government now feels it necessary to warn against dangers which it helped to conjure up, but it begins to look as though the summer will pass without too much gooseflesh. If it hasn't lost entirely its ability to forecast, the stock market suggests a period of somewhat reduced activity ahead, which after all may tend to prolong good times.

Federal Support.

The Government bond market took a lively interest in news from Washington that the full open market committee of the reserve system was meeting, for while the weekly meetings of the sub-committee have attracted general attention, it is widely known that the sub-committee has no power except to act along lines laid down by the full committee. Intimations were made that the Federal Reserve banks would seek a graceful way to cease their open market purchases of Government securities.

Now that May 1 with its higher reserve requirements has passed with a minimum of calls for aid by member banks, there is no longer a need for the reserve system to help members to "adjust" their reserve position by purchasing more Treasury issues. The other reason upon which system purchases were justified was the need to keep the market orderly. Neither the money market nor the bond market has been disorderly for a long period. No secret is made of the fact that the views of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and of Federal Reserve Board Chairman Eccles on such matters as budget balancing and gold price and imports radically differ.

General Motors.

So much discussion sprang up over the executive personnel changes in General Motors that not much attention was paid to the lusty dividend of $1 a share voted by the directors at their strenuous meeting yesterday. The meeting was expected to break up shortly after 4 p. m., but only the pangs of hunger around 6:30 p. m. forced the ending. That fact alone suggested that all was far from harmonious. The official hint was given that the administrative changes made followed a plan drawn up years ago, but the meeting did not seem to be one of simple ratification. Awaiting further hints, Wall Street assumed that the du Pont interests would be held intact and that they would continue to take enough interest in the management to look after the dollars and cents.

Because such investments are usually in small amounts, the price of the securities to be purchased is important, and low or moderately priced stocks may be the most suitable. 25-Year 3¼ Per Cent Debentures Are Priced at 96½ Per Cent.

Of an authorized issue of $45,000,000 Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. 25-year 3¼ per cent debentures, $42,500,000 are offered today by a group of investment banking houses, headed by Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. The debentures are dated April 1 and are priced at 96½ per cent and interest.

The net proceeds, exclusive of accrued interest, from the sale of the debentures, after deducting the estimated expenses of the company in connection with such sale, are expected to approximate $42,394,000 and are to be applied toward the retirement of the company's presently outstanding issue of $47,070,500 of 30-year first-mortgage sinking-fund 5 per cent bonds, due January 1, 1941, which the company intends to redeem on July 1, 1937, at 105 per cent of their principal amount ($49,424,025) and accrued interest. The company expects to obtain the balance (approximately $7,030,000) of the requirements for such redemption, exclusive of accrued interest, from borrowings from American Telephone & Telegraph Co., its parent.

Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph, 99.99 per cent of the stock of which is owned by American Telephone & Telegraph Co., is engaged in the telephone business in Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi and Tennessee. Net income last year was $9,400,016.63 compared with $7,722,234.54 in 1935.

Associated with Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc., as underwriters are: Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Kidder, Peabody & Co., Lee Higginson Corporation, The First Boston Corporation, Brown, Harriman & Co., Inc., and Edward B. Smith & Co.

Eclipse Party Sails Tomorrow From Honolulu

6 Washingtonians Among Scientists Heading for Lonely Pacific Islet.

Carrying 11 tons of scientific equipment, from huge telescopic cameras to stop-watches, 13 scientists of the National Geographic Society—U. S. Navy Eclipse Expedition—will sail from Honolulu tomorrow to observe the eclipse of the sun June 8 from a tiny desert island in mid-Pacific.

On board the Navy seaplane tender Avocet, the scientists will voyage to the uninhabited Phoenix Islands, 180 miles south of the Equator, where on June 8 the moon will blot out the sun for approximately four minutes. Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the National Geographic Society, will fly from San Francisco today and will be present in Honolulu when the expedition leaves tomorrow.

The islands provide the best and almost the only bit of land from which the eclipse can be observed throughout its path of 8,800 miles across the Pacific.

Six Washingtonians will be members of the expedition: Capt. J. F. Hellweg, superintendent of the Naval Observatory, who is in charge of the Navy's participation; Dr. Paul A. McNally, S. J., director of Georgetown College Observatory; Dr. Irvine C. Gardner, National Bureau of Standards; John E. Willis, U. S. Naval Observatory; Charles Bittinger, artist, and Richard H. Stewart, staff representative of the National Geographic Society.

Several new devices and processes never before used in observing an eclipse of the sun have been prepared for use by the expedition.

The expedition will set up a camp on either Enderbury or Canton Island in the Phoenix group. The party probably will arrive about May 13.

Last Rites Held For Robert Hooper

Funeral services were held yesterday for Robert Hooper, 18-year-old son of Louis L. Hooper, business manager of Gallaudet College, who died Monday night as the result of an unusual accident Sunday.

Young Hooper, a brilliant student at Friends School, was on a picnic at Great Falls when a bottle, into which he had packed dry ice, exploded in his hand. Glass penetrated one eye and caused a deep gash in an arm.

Ice cream taken on the party had been packed in dry ice. After eating, the youngsters began packing the dry ice in bottles, capping them, and then throwing them away before they exploded from carbon dioxide. Young Hooper held one bottle too long.

He was taken to Georgetown University Hospital. Two Gallaudet students—Jeff Thorpe and Clive Greenlove—gave their blood for transfusions.

Exhaust Gas Fatal To Hobson Hardee

Carbon monoxide gas took the life of Hobson Hardee, 47, 2609 Third street, north, Lyon Park, Va., last night after he had apparently locked himself in his automobile and raced the motor until he was dead from suffocation.

He was found in the car when his wife, Mae, went to the garage to ascertain what was detaining him. The motor was still running and the windows closed.

Jefferson and Clarendon rescue squads worked over the victim for more than an hour, but to no avail. He was pronounced dead by Dr. W. C. Welburn, Arlington County coroner, who issued a certificate of suicide.

Hardee was in the automobile business in Georgetown.

Eccles Talks Policies With Senate Group

By the Associated Press.

Chairman Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board conferred for more than two hours yesterday with members of the Senate Banking Committee.

Committee Chairman Wagner (Democrat), New York, told reporters the committee had called Eccles to "obtain information" on Federal Reserve policies. Wagner said there was a "general discussion of the economic picture" but no specific legislation was discussed.

School Pupils Decline.

By the Associated Press.

The Office of Education said yesterday a falling birth rate brought in 1936 the first decline of public school enrollments in the Nation's history. An estimate showed 130,000 fewer children were enrolled last fall than the 26,434,193 in grade and high schools two years ago.

Daniel J. Coughlin Funeral Is Today

Funeral servies for Daniel James Coughlin, retired Federal Land Bank examiner of the Farm Loan Board, will be held today at Hyson's undertaking establishment, 1300 N street northwest.

Mr. Coughlin, who retired from the Government service several years ago, died Monday at his home, 6504 Barnaby street northeast. He was 68 years old.

A former banker, Mr. Coughlin, came here in 1917 from Great Bend, Kans. He had been active in Masonic organizations there.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Margaret M. Coughlin; three daughters, Miss Mildred M. Coughlin, of Baltimore, Mrs. Elva C. Wells and Mrs. Frances C. Cummins, of Washington, and a son, Daniel J. Coughlin, jr., of Washington. He also leaves a grandson, Frederick Wells.

Funeral Is Held For Sidney Perham

Funeral services for Sidney H. Perham, 59, retired Government employe, who died Sunday at his home, 1930 K street northwest, were held yesterday at the Hines Funeral Home. Burial was in Arlington National Cemetery. The Rev. John Van Schaick, editor of the Christian Leader, Boston, officiated.

Mr. Perham served in the Spanish-American and World wars—as a captain in the latter. A native of Lewiston, Me., he had come to Washington at the age of 5. He was a grandson of Sidney Perham, a former Governor of Maine.

Among his survivors are his wife, Mrs. Jessie M. Perham; an uncle, William L. Perham, and an aunt, Miss Georgia S. Perham.

Mrs. Helen Daly Dies; Army Officer's Wife

The body was taken last night to Kansas City, Mo., for funeral services and burial.

Frank S. Parks Rites Scheduled for Today

Mr. Parks, who was 75 years old, died Monday at his home, 1609 Hobart street northwest. He was a former president of the National Genealogical Society and was prominent in several Washington fraternal organizations.

Court Opinions Flexible, Says Legal Historian

Rulings May Be Changed, Harvard Professor Tells Women Voters.

The notion that Supreme Court opinions are like the pronouncements of a Delphic oracle is false, Henry M. Hart, assistant professor of legal history at Harvard Law School, last night told persons attending the dinner of the general council of the National League for Women Voters at the Hotel Washington.

"The court has steadily regarded itself as free, on appropriate occasion, to overrule its own decisions flatly, or to distinguish them more narrowly than the doctrine of precedent would ordinarily justify," Hart said. "New conditions or new insight into old conditions may demand a different ruling."

Several hundred guests, representatives of league groups in 35 States, and in Conressional circles, comprised the dinner audience. Mrs. Robert A. Taft, dauhter-in-law of the late President Taft, was toastmaster.

Other speakers were E. E. Schattschneider, of Wesleyan University, whose subject was "In Defense of Politics," and Mrs. Corbett Ashby, of London, president of the International Alliance of Women for Suffrage and Equal Citizenship, who said the risk to democracy in Europe is near and almost overwhelming.

"Judge-Made Law" Cited.

Members of the Diplomatic Corps were advised last night by Gordon Dean, special executive assistant to the Attorney General, that in the current Supreme Court controversy it would be well to remember that the American legal system is founded on the common law of England, but that "our tradition * * * is judge-made law."

Speaking at American University in one of the series of lectures on "Political Institutions of the United States," Dr. Dean pointed out that "there is one decided advantage in the common law system * * * adaptability to growth and development."

He asserted that one disadvantage of the common law was that "we came to worship at the shrine of formalism."

Votes Are Brought In Horse Carriage

Protesting motor taxes it contends would bring back the "horse and buggy" days, the American Automobile Association yesterday resorted to the use of tax-free transportation in the form of a horse-drawn carriage to bring to Congress the votes of 30,000 Washington motorists opposing increases in the District motor vehicle taxes.

The carriage, an ancient victoria, was met by members of the House District Committee, studying the tax problem.

Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the District AAA, made formal presentation of the ballots against a higher gasoline tax and against imposition of a weight tax.

Raskob Letters Cloaked Deals, Leming Asserts

Correspondence With Du Pont for Appearances, U. S. Counsel Says.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 4.—Mason B. Leming, chief counsel for the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the income tax case against Pierre S. du Pont and John J. Raskob, told United States Tax Commissioner Richard Disney today that correspondence between the two financiers and industrialists "was written for the purpose of adding the appearance of reality" to sales of stock after the 1929 Wall street panic.

The Government, contending the two made fictitious stock sales to establish losses, and later repurchased the same blocks of stock, seeks to collect approximately $1,800,000 in alleged deficiency income taxes for 1929.

The letters offered were those written by du Pont to Raskob, confirming the purchase by du Pont of blocks or Raskob's stock on November 13, 1929, totaling $4,606,000.

The letters were addressed by Dupont from his Wilmington office to Raskob's office in New York City.

Correspondence Identified.

Frank L. Garey, Raskob's secretary and manager of his Wilmington office, identified the correspondence and also a notation on the correspondence, showing Garey had received the letters.

Leming called attention to the New York address and asked Garey: "Were these letters received in Mr. Raskob's Wilmington office?"

The secretary replied in the affirmative, and said they were delivered by "someone from Mr. du Pont's office." The letters were accompanied by the certificates of stock included in the sales.

At this point, James S. Y. Ivins, of Washington, chief counsel for du Pont, said he would stipulate that the letters and the stock certificates were received at Raskob's Wilmington office, although addressed to New York.

Earlier, Harold G. Seer, financial analyst and manager of Raskob's New York office, testified he had no recollection of ever seeing the letters in question in Raskob's New York office.

Had Connecting Offices.

As part of the Government's efforts to show the close business relationship existing between Raskob and du Pont, Leming brought out from his examination of Seer that in 1929, du Pont and Raskob maintained connecting offices in the Grand Central Building in New York and that the checks for the November 13 sale were sent to the Bankers Trust Co. for deposit in the same envelope and deposited at the same time.

Raskob gave du Pont his check for $4,582,750 for the stock he purchased from his associate.

In earlier testimony, it was brought out that at the time the checks were issued and deposited together, Raskob did not have enough in the bank to cover the check he drew against his account.

Leming asked Seer, who testified he made out the checks in the New York office, whether he knew Raskob didn't have sufficient funds to cover.

"I don't remember," Seer replied.

"You were the office manager, weren't you?"

"Yes."

Not Disturbed.

"Wouldn't you have been disturbed," Leming asked, "if you knew Mr. Raskob didn't have enough money in the bank to cover the check?"

"No," Seer replied, "I wouldn't be disturbed."

Raskob, sitting off to one side of du Pont's counsel table, beneath a window, chuckled softly at Seer's reply.

They went out to lunch together today and, after adjournment, left together, carrying their own brief cases and leaving their secretaries and attorneys behind.
